Nazi Police Jail Clergy Opposed to Mueller Rule

Many Ministers Hostile to New Dictator Are Arrested.

Observers Predict Battle to Finish

Berlin 'National Synod' Flayed in Manifesto by Dissidents.

Berlin, Aug. 12 (AP).—Secret police were reliably reported tonight to have arrested a large number of clergymen who today denied the authority of Reichsbishop Ludwig Mueller as dictator of the Evangelical Church.

The pastors taken into custody had read from their pulpits a bitter denunciation of the Nazi church leadership.

Their action was believed to be the start of a finish fight in the church controversy, which has raged savagely for months over questions of dogma, dictatorial rule and efforts to regiment clergymen under the Nazi aegis.

An outspoken manifesto, regarded in some quarters as an open declaraton of war against Bishop Mueller's faction, declared the proceedings and resolutoins of the so-called "national synod" are invalid, according to church and secular law.

Anti-Nazis Met at Hamburg.

"Whoever obeys them commits a breach of the church constitution and church law," the manifesto said. "We refuse to obey the call upon congregations and churches to make themselves guilty of the same breaches of the law."

The declaration was drawn up at a meeting of dissident pastors at Hamburg Friday, a day after the meeting of the "national" synod at Berlin, before which Bishop Mueller forced through a series of measures designed to entrench himself still more solidly as master of the church. The Hamburg meeting was attended by the Rev. Martin Niemoeller and the Rev. Gerhard Jacobi, among others.

The Berlin assembly, calling itself the national synod, was formed in contravention of the church constitution, the opposition group insisted.

Reports of the arrests of the clergymen created consternation in religious circles and those daring to speculate openly expressed the fear that a bitter fight is in prospect.

It was impossible to learn whether Niemoeller and Jacobi, long identi-

Woman Leaps Into Niagara

Tourist Dies by Dive Into Gorge From Car 250 Feet in Air.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., Aug. 12 (AP). Mrs. Ruth L. Hyde, 30, wife of William P. Hyde, 87, of Bradford, Pa., committed suicide today by jumping from a sightseeing cable car as it crossed the Niagara Gorge, 250 feet above the whirlpool rapids.

Edgar Hyde, of Bradford, stepson of Mrs. Hyde, said he knew of no reason for her suicide. Her husband thought she had gone home for a visit.

At 3:45 p. m. the pretty, red-haired woman entered the cable car at Niagara Falls, Ontario. She stepped into the steel basket and sat beside Arthur J. McKinley, of Niagara Falls, Ontario. McKinley had his 5-year-old daughter, Catherine, beside him. She lit a cigarette and the child laughed at the swirls of smoke around the woman's head.

The car swung out over the gorge and in a few minutes the dangling basket reached the middle of the river.

The woman threw her cigarette out of the window, stepped on her seat and plunged headlong into the canyon.

Horrified, McKinley watched her body tumbling over and over as it plunged toward the swirling waters of the whirlpool. There was a short splash and the body disappeared.

Air Race Winner Hurt In 100 M. P. H. Landing

Omaha, Aug. 12 (AP).—Gordon Israel, of St. Louis, landing his racing plane at 100 miles an hour after winning the free-for-all event at the Omaha Air Races today cracked up, but escaped with cuts about the face and a few loose teeth.

Israel, 23, brought his ship to earth, but the plane wobbled and bounced high in the air twice, then nosed over.

In winning the 50-mile race, Israel had averaged 197.3 miles an hour.

Two Die in Plane Crash.

Chicago, Aug. 12 (AP).—Ray Casson, 28, Corning, Ark., pilot, and Louis Wastl, 23, of Chicago, were killed today when their plane crashed at Sky Harbor Airport in view of Mary Wastl, fiancee of one and sister of the other. The plane fell from 100 feet and burst into flames.

Stockholm, Aug. 12 (AP).—Archduke Otto, pretender to the Austrian throne, about whose head fly rumors of secret activities by Royalists in Austria and Hungary, arrived at Helsingfors this morning from Copenhagen.

The young archduke immediately entered an automobile which started for the north, presumably for Stockholm. He is expected here tomorrow evening or Tuesday.

A report that the archduke was seeking the hand of a Swedish princess in marriage was ridiculed here. If that is his object, Otto will be

Aluminum Strike Tests Union Power

A. F. L. Prestige at Stake as Both Factions Stand Firm.

New Kensington, Pa., Aug. 12 (U.P.). Union workmen, losing $38,000 every day on strike, battled on a four-State front today to bring the billion-dollar Aluminum Company of American to its knees.

In New Kensington, East St. Louis, Ill., Massena, N. Y., and Alcoa, Tenn., 8,500 striking men and women glanced at meager bank accounts and wondered if the grocer at the corner would grant them credit.

The American Federation of Labor, stung by criticism from its rank and file in the steel industry, chose its best organized manufacturing field—the aluminum industry—to demonstrate its power. On Friday night it issued a strike call, demanding union recognition, the check-off system whereby the company deduct union dues from pay checks of all employes, and what the company insists is a "closed shop." Since Friday not a pound of crude aluminum has been turned out from the company's four largest plants.

Union Prestige at Stake.

The plants affected turn out aluminum ingots which are sent to finishing factories in various parts of the country to be rolled into sheets and stamped into pots and pans.

One thought cheered the strikers today—the Federation of Labor can

Reid, Ocean Flier, Hurt in Crack-up

Hamble, England, Aug. 12 (AP). Leonard G. Reid, who flew the Atlantic Ocean from Canada with James R. Ayling last week, was slightly injured as the ocean plane, The Trail of the Caribou, nosed over after touching a hedge on landing here today.

Reid was piloting the plane and was accompanied by a woman. She was unhurt.

The propellor and the wings were damaged.

Reid took the plane from the Hatfield Airdrome near London. Ayling did not accompany him on the flight.

64 Directors For Housing Work Named

Regional State, District Leaders to "Sell" Building Drive.

Sixty-three men and one woman, all prominent in their communities, yesterday were named as regional, State and district directors of the Better Housing Division of the National Emergency Council.

They will be the field generals in the inauguration of the Administion's housing program, designed to release frozen funds, breathe life into the construction industry, put men to work and improve appearance of American homes.

It will be their task, according to James A. Moffett, Federal Housing Administrator, to carry out a "sales promotion drive." The aim will be to persuade home and factory owners to have their properties repaired or modernized and to encourage contractors and building supply firms to go after business.

To Explain Law.

They also will explain the housing legislation, a feature of which is partial Government insurance of loans made by banks and other financial institutions for modernization and repair purposes.

Eighteen thousand banks will begin accepting applications for loans today.

The appointment of regional, State and district directors was made yesterday at a joint press con-

Insurance Killing Trial Is Set Today

Blonde Accused of Slaying Cripple for $1,800.

Cooperstown, N. Y., Aug. 12 (AP).—Mrs. Eva Coo, 42, blonde operator of a roadside inn, will go on trial tomorrow, charged with the murder of her crippled handyman, Harry Wright. Mrs. Martha Clift, 27, mother of two children, will be tried later.

The two women are charged with taking the 54-year-old cripple to a lonely spot on Crum Horn Mountain, striking him on the head with a mallet, and then driving a car over his body to make it appear that he was a hit-and-run victim.

The State contends they killed Wright for $1,800 insurance of which Mrs. Coo was the beneficiary.

'I Are for Football,' Explains Rich Importer, Hunted Hours

Every policeman in Washington had orders yesterday to be on the lookout for Pedro Grau, 58, wealthy Puerto Rican importer.

"Check all records of arrests and make inquiry at all hospitals," said the lookout. Headquarters thought Grau had come to some foul end, had been robbed, beaten, kidnaped, possibly even murdered. So thought Grau's friend and associate, Antonio Cabanillas. So thought Frank Buckley, of Washington, his attorney.

Cabanillas called headquarters. Grau was missing, he said, had been since he left his hotel, the Bellevue, to attend mass at St. Aloysius' Church. Not only was Grau a gentleman of considerable affluence, he said, but he usually carried a considerable portion of it around with him in convenient denominations. Furthermore, he said he would be back right after church, and Grau was not the sort of man who forgets appointments.

That made the police and a lot of reporters pretty frantic, too. The reporters went to the hotel. No, Grau had not been seen. And probably wouldn't be fore some time. If merely lost, Grau would remain that way until he found some one who could speak Spanish. Grau spoke very little English and understood less.

The reporters waited. Five minutes later their robbery-kidnap murder mystery rolled up in a taxicab. Grau? Yes. Where have you been? Mr. Grau couldn't say. But he could write it, like this:

"This morning I am going for church and come back to hotel. Waiting for my family I are for football. From de football come to hotel."

What Grau meant was that he'd got tired of waiting and had gone to the ball game.

Rift Arises In Support Of New Deal

Business Leaders Tend to Leave Roosevelt Reservation.

G. O. P. Misses Chance to Lead Movement for Modification.

By Raymond Clapper.

Sharp cleavage appears to be developing over President Roosevelt and his policies, with the "average man" generally favorable to them, and business leaders, bankers and other men of affairs inclined to be dubious or frankly hostile.

That, so far as this writer's observation goes, appears to be the answer to the question, "What does the country think of the New Deal by now?"

The answer is necessarily one observer's opinion and does not pretend to be anything more. When the impressions piled up during a four weeks' tour across the country by rail, automobile and airplane are shaken down, the following seems to be a reasonable generalized statement of the situation.

The rank and file still have faith in Mr. Roosevelt, believe he is in their corner, and cling to him as their source of hope for the future.

Business men are increasingly skeptical, feel that the momentum of the early recovery drive has been lost, are apprehensive over the future, fear the Government is biting off more than it can chew, and in increasing numbers are frankly hostile. They recognize there were many abuses in the pre-New Deal era, are on the whole agreeable to NRA regulation of minimum wages and hours, but oppose production quotas and other interference, fear a wave of uncontrollable inflation, and wonder if business will be able to get on its feet while Federal activities continue on their present comprehensive scale.

Republicans Doubted.

The Republican party has failed to inspire the expected enthusiasm. Its attacks on the New Deal have opened up weak spots in Administration policies which are being quietly corrected every day. In the mind of the business man, the Republican party is right in its opposition to regimentation but he also has little confidence in the leadership of the party, feels it is bankrupt of first-class statesmen. To the "average man" the Republican party still stands for the conditions to which he does not want to return. He is more inclined to look upon it as the friend of his exploiters rather than as his protector.

Even among many Republicans there is the conviction that theirs will be a minority party for some time to come and that the time has not arrived when it is possible to crystallize any positive program. Those who feel this way believe that the party should continue its present policy of criticism as a check on the Administration and that it will serve a healthy purpose by continuing to do this.

There was a period, back in May and June, about the time of the Chicago Republican National Committee meeting, when the country seemed to be on the point of making a break from its loyalty to President Roosevelt. Conditions, in the writer's opinion, were ripe for the Republicans to move in. But their work at Chicago failed to strike fire. Even Western Republican leaders were apathetic to the selection of Henry Fletcher as National chairman. The feeling spread that the

Seven Killed, 31 Hurt In Freak Train Wreck

Avignon, France, Aug. 12 (AP). Seven persons were killed and 31 injured in a freak train wreck at the Avignon station early today. The speeding Geneva-Vintimille express jumped the rails and toppled over two freight trains.

Most of the victims were passengers in a wooden car which was smashed. There were no Americans among them.

Harry Pollard Leaves Estate Worth $145,000

Los Angeles, Aug. 12 (AP).—An estate valued at $145,000 was left by Harry A. Pollard, film director, who died last July 6, records in probate court disclosed today.

Pollard left $10,000 each to his sister, Mrs. Nora P. Lane, and two Brothers, Horace and Wilford Pollard, and the balance to his widow, Margarita Fischer, former actress. The estate consists of stocks, bonds and real estate.

Pilot Battling Buzzard Forced To "Bail Out"

Havana, Aug. 12 (U.P.).—An American instructor of Cuban army pilots battled with a huge buzzard over Havana today and saved his life by "bailing out" with a parachute.

The American-built fighting plane crashed into the sea. The buzzard, slashed to pieces by the propeller, plunged in a welter of feathers.

The flier, Leonard James, was picked up by a hydroplane piloted by Ramon Santa Maria.

Short Crops Lift Throttle On Farming

Grain Production Boost to 1927-32 Average Seen Next Year.

AAA Shapes War-Time Control System for Winter Food.

(Associated Press.)

Planning war-time vigilance over the Nation's food and feed supplies next fall and winter, the Farm Administration also is preparing drastic revisions of its 1935 crop control problems.

Official Government estimates are for the lowest crop production in more than 30 years because of continued drought. Thefore, the AAA has undertaken a day-to-day watch over conditions and is starting an inventory of the food and feed supply which will form the basis for guiding its work during the coming year.

Next year's wheat plan is likely to call for the same acreage planted during the years 1927-32, rather than a 15 per cent reduction from that figure. Necessity for this move grew from the prospective cut in the carryover from this year's excessive figure of 270,000,000 bushels to about the normal of 125,000,000 bushels.

Cotton Increase Forecast.

Cotton production, limited this year to 25,000,000 acres under the voluntary control plan and to 10,460,251 bales under the Bankhead act, probably will be extended in 1935 to allow production on 32,000,000 to 35,000,000 acres. This year's large carryover of 13,000,000 bales is expected to be cut to about the normal level of 5,000,000 next year as a result of the prospective short 1934 crop of 9,195,000.

The program for corn and hogs is still to be considered. Final decision will hinge largely on the report of the feed and forage situation showing supplies available in comparison with the live stock population it must support.

Over a period of years, according to Secretary Wallace, the number of hogs tends to balance with the supply of corn. The Administration will seek to maintain this ratio.

Single Contract is Aim.

The 1935 tobacco program awaits drafting after 1934 sales, which will show how far the former excessive surplus has been reduced. Indicated production this year is 1,043,000,000 pounds, about 200,000,000 pounds less than normal consumption requirements.

Minor curtailment programs for rice, cling peaches, walnuts, and a variety of other crops will be adjusted by the respective control committees automatically according to demand to maintain prices at a fair level, officials said.

To eliminate much detailed work involved in administering separate contracts for each crop the Administration is still hopeful of drafting a single contract which will bring the major crops and some feed and forage crops together.

The single contract, or separate contracts if the former is found inadvisable, will call for total increased planting with farmers to receive benefit payments in about the same volume as this year.

Control to Continue.

In return they will curtail production by pasturing or cutting for hay some crops if weather is normal next year and excessive production beyond domestic needs plus exports is threatened. They will also be asked to pledge themselves to continue production control in 1936.

Coupled with these plans may also be a crop lending program patterned after this year's corn loan plan which stored 256,532,000 bushels of corn on the farms of 142,368 borrowers and advanced them $120,647,500 on the security of the stored grain at the rate of 45 cents per bushel.

The entire Administration from Secretary Wallace down is watching weather reports with increasing interest.

Relief efforts continue with the total of cattle purchased in the drought area having reached 2,623,000 head. Sheep purchases in Western range States are to begin late this week.

New Orleans War Back to Courts

Both Sides Await Legal Decisions This Week.

New Orleans, Aug. 12 (AP).—Leaders in the Long-Walmsley political war maintained their unyielding attitude today and the factional dispute over control of city affairs headed back toward the courts.

Senator Huey P. Long declined to discuss his fight on Mayor T. Semmes Walmsley's city machine. Walmsley stood on his statement of yesterday that no armistice was possible until Long called off the militia, mobilized two weeks ago to seize the city voting registration office in advance of the Congressional primary September 11.

Three test suits were brought against Registrar Gregory yesterday by the Walmsley faction, which charged "hundreds of qualified voters" were refused registration since the militia seized the office. A hearing was set for Thursday.

On Tuesday a city injunction action against Senator Long and Adjt. Gen. Raymond H. Fleming is set for hearing. The district court already has issued a restrainer against the troops, which has been ignored.

Rescuers Find Byrd, Thin, Weak But Safe; Snowbound 4 Months

'Thin and Weak, In Good Spirits, Safe'

A third attempt to reach Rear Admiral Richard Evelyn Byrd across 123 miles of the Antarctic icecap has succeeded, the National Geographical Society in Washington was advised by radio from Little America yesterday.

Tractor Party Crosses Ice Barrier to Rescue Chief.

Washington Man Is One of Group

Geographic Society Gets Message on Finding of Explorer.

Rear Admiral Richard Evelyn Byrd, alone for four months in a solitary hut on the tip of the Antarctic, the southernmost meteorological station in the world, has been found "thin and weak," though in "good spirits and safe," the National Geographic Society in Washington was advised last night in a message from Little America to its vice president, John Oliver LaGorce.

It was the first word from the famous explorer since he arranged July 20 with his staff at Little America to be relieved from his solitary vigil. Byrd told his men at the time that he had a "bad arm" and it is believed that this prevented him from operating a manual power generator attached to his radio transmitter.

The message to LaGorce, radioed to National Geographic headquarters in New York and relayed by telegraph to him in Washington follows:

"Tractor party has reached advance base and while Byrd is thin and weak he is in good spirits and safe."

D. C. Man in Party.

The message was signed "Murphy." Murphy, it was explained by Georgraphic officials, is Charles J. V. Murphy, Little America communications officer.

In the Byrd rescue party was a Washington man, Espaminondas James "Pete" Demas, 28, son of Nick James Demas, 1906 Irving street northeast, who has been the admiral's companion on all previous expeditions. Heading the rescuers was Dr. Thomas C. Poulter, the expedition's second in command. The third member of the party was a radio operator, Amory H. White.

Twice before rescuers headed by Dr. Poulter set out with tractors and heavy supplies of food and equipment to reach Admiral Byrd, 123 miles south across the ice barrier from the Little America base. Each time blizzards that obliterated the flag-marked trail to the one-room Byrd hut, and extreme cold, turned them back.

Calls for Relief.

The third and successful attempt to negotiate the crevassed and gale-swept icecap was begun on the morning of August 8. At that time, reports said, Demas was driving the tractor, Dr. Poulter and White skiing on ahead, planting flags.

Byrd began his solitary watch four months ago. He originally intended to spend six or seven months in his shack under the snow and ice, studying delicate weather and climatic instruments. Injury to his arm, though the nature of it has not been described in accounts from Little America, is believed to have forced him to call for relief. Two observers were to have been left in his place.

Five men composed the rescue party. They carried with them full camping equipment, including a cabin holding two folding bunks

2-Hour Rain Breaks Heat; City Steams

10-Degree Drop Brings Relief; Downpour Aids Crops.

Temperatures yesterday were recorded at the U. S. Weather Bureau as follows:

10 a. m.	81	4 p. m.	76
11 a. m.	85	5 p. m.	77
12 noon	86	6 p. m.	76
1 p. m.	87	7 p. m.	75
2 p. m.	84	8 p. m.	74
3 p. m.	74	9 p. m.	72

A drenching rain that began falling soon after 3 p. m. yesterday brought a 10-degree drop in temperature but did not relieve the excessive humidity in the National Capital. Precipitation was .83 inch.

Overcast skies shadowed the city most of the forenoon prior to the deluge which lasted for nearly two hours.

The temperature hovered above the 80 degree mark all morning, but dropped into the low 70s during the rain. Humidity was high both before and after the storm.

For today, the Weather Bureau forecast is more showers with little change in temperature.

Yesterday's rain, the second heavy downpour in 24 hours, definitely ended the drought which had injured crops in nearby Maryland and Virginia.

One prostration was reported here. John Roy Taylor, 11, colored, of 635 Second street northeast, was overcome in the yard of his home.

Veterans Ask Miss Perkins Be Censured

Failure to Press Charges Against Undesirables Is Claimed.

San Francisco, Aug. 12 (AP).—Censure of Secretary of Labor Perkins, for "failure to proceed with deportation proceedings," was sought today as the California department of the American Legion began a drive for stricter enforcement of laws against subversive elements.

Resolutions prepared for submission to the annual State convention, now in session here, recommended, in addition to censure of the Secretary:

Transfer of the duty of deporting alien radicals from the Department of Labor to the Department of Justice, and tightening of California "treason" statutes.

Made public today by A. Louis Belotti, chairman of a special Americanism committee named by Homer Chaillaux, State commander, each resolution cited "a series of events of strife and violence" which have "swept this Nation," and charged they were incited and prolonged "by the Communist party and its affiliated organizations."

Text of Perkins Criticism.

The resolution naming Miss Perkins recommends:

"That this convention does censure Madame Secretary Perkins for her inactivity, lack of interest and failure to proceed with deportation proceedings against alien radicals, and for the further fact that by reason of such inactivity * * * she

Such Stuff! Cries Naturalist, Ragging Smithsonian Animals

(Associated Press.)

John M. Phillips, Pittsburgh business man and naturalist, has not only a bone but also a rag and a hank of hair to pick with the Smithsonian Institution.

He argues that that august scientific institution ought to label some of its stuffed animals "antiques."

"They're grotesque," Phillips said yesterday of some of the oldest inhabitants of a collection which dates back to the 1850's.

"They would make a great collection to show taxidermy from its beginning as mere stuffing to a genuine sculptor's art. That would be an educational lesson to the children.

"But they shouldn't be put out to be admired. They look starved, or like bloated bondholders. Some of the taxidermists who did the stuffing in the early days had never seen the animal. Hair that once was brown has faded almost white through the years.

"About 30 years ago, I gave Smithsonian one of the finest of grizzly skins. By that time taxidermy had grown out of the straight stuffing stage to where they built a frame-four legs, a backbone and a neck, wrapped it with tow, and put the hide over that.

"I tried to give the taxidermist accurate measurements, but he insisted he knew all about mounting bears.

"Well, when I saw my grizzly in the case, he had shrunk to the size of a brown bear. Great hunks of hide had been taken out. More years passed, some one hunted up the left-over hunks of hide, sewed them back in, and he was remounted, more nearly natural size. Yes, he's there yet."

Smithsonian curators said some of their animals are 50 years old, and some put in only yesterday.

Pius Bathes Statue Of Virgin With Light

Seized in Bremer Case; Now Held Jailbreaker

Paduca, Ky., Aug. 12 (AP).—Police tonight announced a man arrested here yesterday, at first believed to be Alvin Karpis, Bremer kidnaping suspect, had been identified as Joe Palmer, one of the men who fled in a sensational escape from the Texas Prison death house at Huntsville three weeks ago.

Guard to Trial Today In Death House Break

Huntsville, Tex., Aug. 12 (AP). James A. (Boss) Patterson, Texas penitentiary guard, will go on trial here tomorrow, charged with aiding Raymond Hamilton, Joe Palmer and Irvin (Blackie) Thompson to escape from the prison death house July 22.

District Attorney Max Rogers planned to handle Patterson's case with the same swiftness that attended the trials of Hamilton and Palmer, when both were sentenced to death for the murder of Maj. Crowson, Eastham prison guard. Rogers said Patterson admitted receiving $500 for smuggling three weapons to the killer trio.

and a stove. Three days later they turned back.

A few days later a second rescue attempt was made. This time Dr. Poulter returned with a frozen nose. Other members of his party suffered frostbite. A 60mile gale, they reported, stopped the tractor.

Narrow Escapes.

On several occasions near disaster has threatened the expedition. At the very outset of its stay at Little America, when men and dogs were struggling to get food and provisions stowed away before winter, ice crumbling away from the barrier imperiled the expedition.

In June, Byrd, who has until the last few weeks kept in more or less regular touch with civilization by radio, described by wireless a narrow escape from carbon monoxide poisoning. The gas was generated he said from his kerosene stove and from the engines used in his scientific work at the advance base.

"I felt rocky," he reported, "and decided it would not be wise to continue operating the small engine mounted on a shelf in one of the tunnels leading from the shack."

Dr. LaGorce, a close friend of Admiral Byrd, sent him a message of congratulations as soon as word of his safety reached here.

"Delighted and greatly relieved," it said, "at advices from Little America that detail led by Dr. Poulter reached you at advanced scientific base and found you in good spirits * * * The National Geographic Society and your friends of the staff join me in congratulations and good wishes together with the hope that you will take every care to rest and completely regain your strength. disappointed upon arrival in Stockholm, for the entire royal family is absent on a holiday.

The expected arrival of Archduke Otto in Sweden sets at rest for a time reports that he was about to go to Italy for a conference with his mother, the former Empress Zita, and other members of his family on the prospects of restoration of the monarchy in Austria and, according to the belief in some quarters, Hungary.

One report given wide circulation was that marriage of the archduke and Princess Maria, youngest daughter of King Victor Emanuel of Italy, was being considered.

Other reports stated that the Hapsburg family was contemplating establishing a home in Luxembourg. Prince Felix, consort of the Grand Duchess of Luxembourg, is an uncle of Otto.

Swedish Wedding Rumored.

Brussels, Aug. 12 (AP).—According to the Independence Belge, Archduke Otto of Austria intends to marry a Swedish princess.

The newspaper stated such a marriage would be calculated to conciliate Hitlerites of Germany, who consider the Swedes "super Aryans."

Copenhagen, Denmark, Aug. 12 (AP).—Archduke Otto, who departed today for Sweden, arrived here last night from Bernstorff Castle, where he had visited.

He went to a Hungarian restaurant, where he ordered his favorite dishes—potato soup, crawfish and cabbage. The archduke apparently was greatly pleased by the music of a gypsy band. After a tempestuous czardas—Maygar dance—he thanked the performers individually.

Baltimore and Western Pennsylvania also felt the lash of the rainstorm.

Why Not Ask Snitz?

Ownership of Dog Proves Tough Problem for Judge, Who Hears Witnesses Disagree; Blood Test Proposed, But "Owners" Veto Idea.

Winchester, Va., Aug. 12 (Spl.). Until tomorrow at least, Snitz, a white Spitz, is James Fishback's dog.

For more than an hour yesterday Snitz stretched comfortably on the concrete floor at the foot of Magistrate Frank Krebs' desk and listened while witnesses tried to determine his ownership.

Snitz is claimed by Miss Nannie McIntosh, who has lost a Spitz dog.

James Fishback testified that he bought Snitz two weeks ago from Cecil Peer. Witnesses said that Mr. Peer has had a Spitz that looks like Snitz from puppyhood.

Storekeepers, a milkman, children and neighbors were paraded on the witness stand. Finally Harry R. Kern, representing Miss McIntosh suggested a blood test to determine if Snitz is the dog his client says she purchased from a Takoma Park, D. C., kennel. But the blood test proposal was not cordially received by the litigants.

At the end of the session, Snitz, unworried, blinked his bright eyes and walked leisurely to Mr. Fishback.

"You take him home and keep him until Monday," Magistrate Krebs told Fishback.

To an observer he added, "I want to think over it, study over it and perhaps dream over it."

He will make his decision tomorrow morning.

Post's Smoke Fund Is Swelled By First Returns From Stores

All Kinds of Tobacco Are Donated for Capital's Unemployed.

If the first returns from The Washington Post's Capital Relief Smoke Fund boxes in almost 40 Peoples Drug Stores over the city are an indication of comradeship among men, the city's unemployed soon will be enjoying the comfort of good smokes.

Within 48 hours after the boxes were placed in the Peoples stores, Post Fund authorized collectors brought in scores of packages of cigarettes and smoking tobacco. These were added to hundreds of packages received from other sources since The Post campaign began to provide smokes for less fortunate men who are on relief rolls or otherwise unable to afford a few pennies a week for smoking comfort.

Included in the first Peoples stores collection was everything from cut plug for pipes to 10-cent cigars. One man evidently had bought a can of tobacco, filled his pipe from it and then, noticing The Post collection box, contributed the remainder.

Although all cash contributions should be brought to The Post building or mailed to The Washington Post Capital Relief Smoke Fund, care of The Post, a few persons had contributed pennies from the change in purchasing cigarettes.

Cigarettes are the popular contribution, one store box yielding more than a dozen packages of one popular brand alone.

One contributor, in dropping a package in a store box, remarked to the store manager:

"I have been associated for some time with men forced to drift about the country because of no steady employment. Many men who would balk at asking a stranger for lunch money will not hesitate to ask for a cigarette. Men who would starve before taking another's property have no hesitancy in 'bumming a smoke.' I think The Post is meeting a paramount need among men who enjoy a smoke but who can not possibly spare the few cents necessary to buy cigarettes or the makings.

"A good smoke is a soothing interlude for the fellow who is wondering where his next meal is coming from. It makes him feel a lot better."

Collections will be made by Post collectors early this week from stores of the Atlantic & Pacific, American and Sanitary and Piggly Wiggly grocery companies. More than 200 boxes have been placed in these stores in every section of the city, through the cooperation of local store officials.

Boxes have been placed in stores in every part of the city in order that every Washingtonian who has the true spirit of comradeship may contribute a small item—a package of cigarettes or a can of tobacco—to help make the going a little more cheerful for a good man who is tasting misfortune.

A woman was killed and 15 persons were injured in week-end automobile accidents in the Washington area.

Hyattsville authorities are investigating a three-car crash near Brentwood, Md., early yesterday in which Mrs. Amelia McHale, Labor Department stenographer, was killed and eight men, including her husband, Patrolman James H. McHale, Tenth Precinct, were injured.

Field Directors Selected To Direct Housing Program

ference in the National Press Club between Donald R. Richberg, executive director of the National Emergency Council, and Housing Administrator Moffett.

It was explained that Richberg had made the appointments and that Moffett had concurred in them. This was done, it was said, to expedite the housing drive.

Thirty of those named State directors have been serving as State directors for the Emergency Council.

Administrator Moffett later explained that the Federal Housing Administration will set up its own organization in the field.

Range in Salaries.

Those named yesterday will receive salaries ranging from $4,500 to $6,800 a year. Richberg said he didn't know anything about the political affiliations of the directors. Moffett agreed that the standing of the men in their communities, rather than their politics, was the most important consideration.

The housing drive for the District of Columbia, it was announced, would be in charge of W. D. Flanders, of New York, director of the field organization in the set-up created yesterday.

Mr. Flanders said that he would soon select a local man to head a committee, whose task it will be to get the housing program under way here. He added that it was hoped to make the District of Columbia a model from the standpoint of modernization and repair.

The regional, State and district directors appointed yesterday include bankers, builders, lawyers, merchants and publicists.

Auto luggage must consume as little space as possible, yet carry sufficient clothing. It must also be angular in order to facilitate packing, and allow other luggage to be placed on it.

TRAIN

Since rail luggage is out of your possession for part of the trip, it should all match, to prevent its being picked up in error. This does not apply to over-night luggage, which is never out of the owner's possession.

PLANE

Air luggage should first of all be light in weight. Some think light colors mean airplane luggage. This is just the reverse of the truth. You are allowed 30 lbs. with an excess of ½ of 1% of the fare for each additional pound. This is expensive, so buy correctly.

Peace Offer Made In Truck Strike

New Proposal by Owners Kept Secret.

Minneapolis, Aug. 12 (AP).—Balked in their efforts to lift military rule by court injunction, truck owners today held out a new proposal to their striking employes to end the walkout.

What details the new plan incorporated they declined to make public, but the two Federal mediators here, the Rev. Francis J. Haas and E. H. Bunnigan, took it to strike leaders after a long conference with the owners.

Both groups held protracted meetings today to consider latest developments in the 27-day-old strike. The employers' advisory committee, representing 166 firms involved, held a separate session while the strikers pondered the newest peace move.

Public Backing For New Deal Seen Dividing

Business Leaders Tend to Draw Away From Administration.

party had learned nothing since the 1932 election. That feeling percolated down through the rank and file and if the facts could be ascertained scientifically they probably would show a rise in Mr. Roosevelt's rank and file popularity dating from June. That is an opinion, but it seems to this writer to explain most logically the abnormal continuation of Mr. Roosevelt's popularity.

Partisanship Pushed Aside.

At the moment, Mr. Roosevelt seems to be attempting further to obliterate party lines and to make loyalty to the New Deal the test of his favor. He will take Democrats, Republicans, Farmer-Laborites, anybody who will approve his policies in Congress. Whether this will lead eventually to a realignment of the traditional political parties time alone will tell. The beginnings of a possible evolution in this direction are here. But the rebuilding of a National party organization is an infinitely complicated job because parties have innumerable local roots which can not be torn out easily. In the Democratic party there are many leaders who do not go along with Mr. Roosevelt's philosophy. On the other hand he has the basic organization and it would seem more logical to attempt gradually to change its complexion and mould it to his ideas than to attempt to create a new party. Then there is the large mass of independent Republicans who already have gone over in everything but name—the Hiram Johnsons, the La Follettes, the Cuttings. Furthermore, about 1,000,000 new voters come up every year and among the 10,000,000 or more who have reached voting age since the World War, party lines lie very lightly. They are easily swung from one party to another.

In all it would seem as if Mr. Roosevelt is attempting to shape the Democratic party into a liberal-progressive party and to annex sympathetic elements from the Republican party. This in itself would bring about the realignment of parties into the long expected progressive-conservative division without creating a new party. In the light of practical politics, that seems to be the line of development now under way.

Mr. Roosevelt made it plain in his Green Bay speech that he intends to follow a left-wing course and the logical assumption is that he proposes carrying the Democratic party along the same route. After all he is a practical politician and that is the more practical path to take.

Loyalty Without Question.

As to where the Roosevelt policies are leading the country—here again one finds the same cleavage. The "average man" who now replaces the "forgotten man" in the New Deal vocabulary, is against what he terms "Wall Street." He is against the things that Mr. Roosevelt is against. Seldom analyzing or looking far into the future, the "average man" is emotional in his politics. He feels that he has a friend in Mr. Roosevelt and the dangers of inflation, the dangers of monopolistic control under NRA, the heavy Government expenditures, the fact that public works projects like Grand Coulee dam are largely disguised pork, do not interest him. He hears Mr. Roosevelt speak against the old law of "tooth and claw," against the utilities, against "selfish interests," and he likes that. So he asks no questions.

But move out of the crowd around the railroad tracks where the Presidential train has stopped and go up town and ask the banker, the manufacturer, the large merchant and the insurance man what he thinks, and you find him in a totally different frame of mind. Usually he will say that he sympathizes with Mr. Roosevelt's efforts to eliminate abuses of pre-1932 days. But he does not see how the Government can continue its heavy expenditures without going heavily into inflation. He reads that Mr. Roosevelt is promising to embark on a greater public works project that the Nation will be in a generation in completing and he wonders how it can be paid for. He wonders where the new electric power will go when in the areas where the greatest projects are now being built there is twice as much power capacity in existence as is needed. He sees a manufacturer held to a restricted quota of lumber sales, and if he gets more orders than his quota he must buy from competitors to fill them.

Such things arouse his deep distrust. He feels that Mr. Roosevelt is playing to the crowd, is not interested in whether business ever returns to the major place it once held in the scheme of things and is rather circuitously leading the country by degrees into a regime of state socialism. To the business man who went West as a lad and built up a business it seems to mean the end of such opportunities, and he doesn't like it.

There isn't a reader who can not find individual exceptions to these statements. He will find "average men" who are against the Administration and he will find business men—and big business men—who are for it. But, in general, the foregoing is as objective a judgment as to what people are thinking as this writer is able to give.

MY DOG STORY

The enthusiastic response to The Washington Post's dog story contest has resulted in the editor being swamped beneath hundreds of contributions. The prize winner for the first week will be announced in tomorrow's edition. Send in YOUR dog story; $10 will be paid for the best one submitted each week.

A. B. Mudd,
1735 Second Street Northwest.

I have a friend who lives in Virginia, who has two dogs—one a bull terrier, the other a collie.

The dogs are fairly good friends, as long as some one is around, but when left alone it is necessary to put them in different rooms.

Some time ago, when they were younger, the owner fixed two places for them to sleep—each one having a different room—in order to keep "peace in the family."

One day he happened to be in the room where the bull had his place. He noticed the collie came in and lie down on the place fixed for the bull. Some little while later the bull came into the room and noticed that the collie occupied his bed. He did not make any protest, but walked around and back and forth for some minutes.

All of a sudden the bull jumped to the window, putting his front paws on the sill, and began to bark very loudly.

The collie jumped up from the bed and ran to the window to see what was wrong.

The bull calmly got down from his place at the window and walked over to his own bed, and after turning around two or three times, settled down, very well satisfied with his ruse, which certainly worked.

The owner told me that there was absolutely nothing to cause the bull to bark at, and reasoned that the bull had simply outsmarted the collie.

By Duane Lester,
Cavalier Hotel.

As a boy in Mississippi I was an inveterate fisherman and Pat, my fox terrier, was my constant companion on all my fishing trips.

One morning about daybreak as I rounded a bend in the lake, I came upon a "cotton mouth" moccasin, the deadliest of all American snakes, where he lay coiled in the middle of the path. I was almost upon him before I saw him and being unable to stop, attempted to jump over him. The path was slippery from a recent shower and as I started my leap I slipped and fell sprawling, flat on my back alongside the moccasin.

Slowly the snake raised his head and struck, missing my thigh by inches. I seemed literally paralyzed as he prepared to strike again. This time he was too close to miss. Actually it was but a matter of seconds that I lay there helpless, but it seemed an eternity.

Suddenly a small, white ball of fury rushed in, seized the moccasin by the neck and snarling, dragged him away from me. Pat, who a few seconds before had been chasing unsuspecting bullfrogs into the lake, had for some reason I will never know, sensed my danger and come to my rescue.

I leaped to my feet, seized the canoe paddle which I was carrying when I fell and hurried to Pat's aid. I was too late. The huge moccasin had been too heavy for Pat to handle, after wriggling free, struck once.

Pat gave a yelp of surprise and pain as I killed the snake.

Then I started for home and a doctor with Pat at my heels. Pat couldn't make it though. The poison got in its deadly work as we hurried along the top of the levee a half-mile away. He looked at me with piteous eyes as I picked him up.

Pat died in my arms.

fied with protesting groups, had been arrested.

The pronouncement of the opposition group asserted that the present state of affairs in the church is due to continued "uncanonical actions, especially by the reichsbishop, whose business it is to be a warden to the church constitution.

"The reich's church government disregards the simplest principles of law and justice," the manifesto continued.

"It places preaching the Gospel under the arbitrary will of fallible persons. It is bereft of the brotherly love enjoined by Holy Writ.

"It consequently abandons the foundations of the reformed churches, which are built upon the Gospel. Whoever repeatedly breaks the law and the constitution, although bound to protect them, loses all claim to obedience. Whoever repeatedly abandons principles of Christian doctrine, although called upon to observe such, places himself outside the pale of the church."

Union Prestige In Aluminum War at Stake

Test of A. F. L. Strength Seen as Both Sides Stand Firm.

not afford to lose its fight. Irreparable damage to union prestige would follow defeat on its strongest manufacturing front. The A. F. of L. was expected to pour thousands of dollars in strike benefits into workmen's pockets.

At the New Kensington district plants, employing 4,300 men and women, the company's pay roll is more than half a million dollars a month. The company's pay roll at the four plants on strike is well over a million dollars a month.

Few Pickets Are Seen.

A few pickets loitered about the gates of the striking plants, but they found little to do. The walkout was accomplished with a surprising lack of violence. The workmen either did not wish or did not dare to incur union wrath by trying to enter the plants. The union insists 90 per cent of the men employed in making virgin aluminum are members of the Aluminum Council of America, although the figure frequently is disputed.

The Mellon-dominated aluminum "Trust," pointing to what it claims is a three-and-a-half-year supply of bulk aluminum, defiantly declared the strike "will not affect our attitude," and called the union demands "opposed to the spirit and the letter of the NRA."

About 6,500 employes of aluminum finishing plants in the New York City district are unaffected by the strike, and, according to the company, are unorganized.

Material Piled in Yards.

Part of the bulk aluminium is piled in the yards of the striking plants. The union insists "not a workman" will lift a hand to load it on cars for shipment to the finishing plants, where it is made into automobile bodies and dishes and prepared for scores of other uses.

As the strike entered its third day, observers believed it had settled down to a battle of dollars.

The company believes that in a week, or a month, or perhaps six months, impoverished workmen will rise and crush the union.

But before the thousands of dollars in union coffers are exhausted, the union believes the Aluminum Co. will face a dearth of crude aluminum and a flood of unfilled orders, and will take the men back at their own terms.

TRUST SERVICE UP ON HIS WAY for THE MAN
It is a mistaken idea that Trust Services, used so frequently by men of means who have "arrived", are not also available to those who are on their way up.
To the younger man who is building solidly and is forging ahead in his business and profession we recommend a Life Insurance Trust. This forms an estate backlog that will provide regular income for his family and make special funds available for family emergencies.
Then, as his resources increase, we suggest the establishment of a Living Trust. It will produce immediate income and the fund can be increased from year to year as his business prospers.
Ambitious young men will find us sympathetic with their aims and purposes. We are always glad to answer their questions on any aspects of Trust Services.

American Song.

Is Paul Engle a great poet? This simple question concerning a young man from Iowa, whose name hitherto has been entirely unknown, seems to have stirred up a considerable controversy in literary circles.

If the word of Lucius Beebe, New York commentator extraordinary, is to be believed, he has the distinction of being the first author of a first book of poems ever to have been accorded a first page criticism in the Times book review. Elsewhere he has been hailed as the obvious winner of the next Pulitzer prize in poetry. And yet he is a youngster whose photograph reveals him as a sweater-clad college boy who might well have been chosen for the monthly hall of fame of College Humor.

His book of verse won a prize offered by the magazine Poetry. It is a poem which, in hardly original form, sets forth what one able critic has called a "one hundred per cent American reaffirmation of the philosophy of courageous (nee rugged) individualism." But whether the form is original, or cribbed from T. S. Eliot, via Archibald Macleish, the book, in the phrase of the book reviewer, is undoubtedly significant. For it talks much about "the old American courage," which, the young poet avers, his generation "will cry . . . till the darkest death bend us to earth and leave us broken there."

Is this a youthful prophecy that the young poets now coming on the scene look forward to another war? Is not Paul Engle, in his demand for courage and individualism, merely repeating that same philosophy that led Rupert Brooke, and too many others, to find those little spots that shall forever be England, or America, or any other nation?

Perhaps we may see, in this young man's verses, the coming of an American Shelley, the sunworshiping, romantic Shelley. But not the radical Shelley, not the one who rebelled against his world and dreamed, so foolishly perhaps, of the brotherhood of man. At a time when the world is all topsy-turvy, when standards have gone and the future is any one's guess, when leadership of any kind is called for, when we have reaped the bitter fruits of the Wasteland, we find a poet no longer embittered, no longer disillusioned, but singing a song in praise of courage.

Is it that he is the prophet of a new and glorious age? Or is it that he is too young for disillusion, too untouched by the despair of his own time, to be, in his optimism, a prophet? Is his a song of hope? Or only of wishful thinking?

The Wrong Way.

Treasury officials show an extraordinary ignorance of the state of mind of the American business man if they think that rumors of inflation can be silenced by announcing that there are no present plans for issuing as many silver certificates as the law allows. The short selling of dollars, the excited rumors, and the drop in Government bond prices that followed announcements concerning the new silver certificates were due to a realization that the period of monetary experimentation is not over. It is the uncertainty as to what the future has in store for the country, not alarm over what has been done, that gives rise to deep and abiding uneasiness.

So long as Treasury officials emphasize the fact that they are operating on a "24-hour basis," and may change their plans at any moment, business will mark time and recovery will lag. What is wanted is an assurance that the Treasury is not working on a day-to-day basis, but is following well-defined policies which show a realizing sense of the importance of currency stability. Mere assurances that the issuance of silver certificates will not be rushed does not impress those who are alarmed by the unceasing efforts to depress the purchasing power of the dollar by resort to manipulation.

Stolen Guns.

Raids on National Guard armories of an almost wholesale nature have been made by criminals in search of firearms. Weapons ranging from pistols to machine guns have been taken in some 74 thefts already investigated by the Department of Justice.

Although a small percentage of recoveries has been made by the department's agents, large quantities of ammunition and numerous weapons are still missing, ostensibly in the hands of lawbreakers. As a result the Department of Justice has taken the matter up with the War Department, which will urge the Governors of the various States to arrange for adequate protection of firearms and ammunition.

Police officials everywhere have long sought a National law regulating the sale of firearms, for it is well known that criminals can legally obtain weapons with disgraceful ease. But, especially in States which make an effort to control the sale of guns and shells, the armories have been found easy to enter and the tools of the National Guard easy to carry away. Adequate facilities for the storage of the arms is badly needed and it should not be so difficult a task for a military body, so often called upon these days to protect the property of others, to protect its own property against depredation.

It might be well to hold all National Guard officers strictly accountable for the guns and bullets in their charge, while carrying on the campaign for a much-needed Federal law regulating the sales and use of all lethal weapons.

How Many Unemployed?

The controversy over the extent of unemployment between the United States Chamber of Commerce and the American Federation of Labor may prove of real social value if it serves to concentrate attention on the underlying issue.

This is the deplorable absence of any reliable statistical information on the subject in dispute. When the estimates of two responsible private agencies can vary by over three million—when there is a discrepancy of some 30 per cent between their respective guesses—the National need for what the chamber calls "not more statistics, but better statistics," is apparent.

It is interesting to reflect on what the public would think if the country were at war, and our military authorities had to confess that they did not know within three million how many soldiers were under arms. Or, to shift the parallel, what would we say of our Public Health Service if during an epidemic it were forced to confess that its estimate of contagious cases were merely uninformed guesses?

The menace of unemployment is today as much of a threat to the safety of this country as any war or any disease. Yet it remains true, as the present Commissioner of Labor Statistics once told a Congressional committee, that "while we know our National cold-storage holdings of cheese and pickled pork, we have no adequate machinery for collecting essential data on the vital problem of unemployment."

Fortunately a great deal of progress toward creating such machinery has been made since Dr. Lubin voiced that cutting observation. With little publicity, and with little expenditure of money, the United States Employment Service has in recent months been steadily developing its Federal-State network of public employment exchanges. An essential part of this development has been the systemization of statistical method. There is no longer much doubt that, in due time, the Department of Labor will be in a position where it will be able to provide as accurate information on the extent and character of National unemployment as is now possessed by the British, German, and other European governments.

The explanation of the possession of precise and reliable unemployment statistics by these countries is two-fold. In the first place they have efficient public employment exchange systems, in the reliability of which private employers know by experience they can have full confidence. In the second place all monetary relief for the able-bodied unemployed, whether in the form of insurance or doles, is paid out through these offices.

The employment exchanges, linked together, so that each has knowledge of openings in every part of the country, apply the effective test of unemployment. If they know of an available job the applicant is forwarded to it. If no suitable openings, public or private, are listed the cash payment is made and the applicant remains on the "live registry" of unemployed. Clearing through central statistical offices both the British and the German governments know from week to week not merely the changing totals of unemployment, but also its extent in every locality, industry and age-group.

The United States is still one of the most backward of industrial nations in handling the unemployment problem. We still hand out relief in ways which encourage grafting and provide no real check on the sincerity or willingness of the applicant to work. We still talk of taking a census of the unemployed which would be out-of-date and useless three months after compilation.

But for all that, progress is being made. The United States Employment Service has more than proved its value on emergency work projects. Its development is now such that it is placing more workers in private than in public employment—a sure test of its efficiency. In spite of repeated efforts by Secretary Farley's henchmen to suborn it for political purposes, the service has throughout been operated on a rigidly nonpartisan basis, by officers who are for the most part trained experts in their field. Because of this honesty its appropriations have been very meager—the entire agency spends in a year little more than the CWA ran through in a single day. But that has probably helped rather than hampered the careful development of the organization.

Given a couple more years at the present tempo of development and it will be possible for this country to know, instead of helplessly to argue over, both the extent and the character of its unemployment problem.

Bridge Humor.

The trouble with bridge is that almost all who play it take it too seriously. It may call for a keen intellect and a mathematical mind, but it atrophies the sense of humor. Even that most awful of creatures, the wise-cracking bridge player, is able to make an original remark only about once in a blue moon. There should be certain established rules governing what may or may not be said at a bridge table. We hardly think it necessary to mention any of the comments that under the new rules would be proscribed. Every bridge player has heard them, and been guilty, even, of their commission.

P. Hal Sims and Oswald Jacoby, playing at the summer tournament at Asbury Park, were telling stories during the play. Each story told was at the expense of the other. And, according to the garbled accounts of the war correspondents covering the great battle, the alleged humor led to fisticuffs and an ear pulling match. Here is one of them. During a match one man called upon his opponent to bid. "I'll bid," said the other, "when Jacoby takes his eyes out of my lap."

That, we submit, is a good sample of bridge humor. And something should be done about it. Our suggestion is that all bridge games be played in utter silence. Penalty for infringement of this rule would be to make the offender stand in the corner for a half hour, saying over to himself in a monotone a series of the general banalities whose incessant repetition at bridge parties give the lie to the theory that bridge is an intellectual pastime.

The Consumer's Age.

In an article appearing in The Sunday Post, Stuart Chase proceeds to relegate producers to the limbo of a predepression age that ended in 1930 or thereabouts. Since then, he says, we have entered an era when the consumer will be paramount. This all important individual is "usually a woman," and her decisions, as well as the amount of money at her command will determine the fate of business.

Except for the emphasis placed upon the position of women as family purchasing agents, there is nothing unusual about this analysis of the role played by the ultimate consumer in making or breaking business. The recognized function of the producer is to supply, indeed to anticipate, the needs of consumers, although many of our new era economists picture him as a benighted individual busily engaged in creating things that nobody wants. As described by Mr. Chase, he is a man who "embarrasses our whole economy with his surpluses."

Even the producer's profits are, in Mr. Chase's opinion, no longer vital to industry. On the contrary, he says that they may be positively detrimental, because profits are apt to be reinvested in plants that turn out more unwanted goods. What is needed is more consumer buying power, more spending and less investment to rid us of these surpluses. Otherwise, Mr. Chase thinks that we had better give up mass production methods and go back to handicrafts. These conclusions are based, of course, upon the assumption that our agricultural and industrial equipment has been greatly overdeveloped—a proposition that is open to challenge.

While certain industries have undoubtedly been expanded too rapidly, painstaking investigation and measurement of the productive capacity of leading American industries, such as that recently undertaken by the Brookings Institution, show how greatly the extent and the significance of the surplus plant capacity of the country have been exaggerated. With due allowance for seasonal factors, unavoidable stoppages, obsolescence and other limitations upon continued operation, the alleged over-expansion in many cases is reduced to moderate proportions, and the alarmists are discredited.

In a period of profound depression, of course, unutilized plant capacity should not be confused or identified with excess capacity, nor should all unsalable goods be regarded as superfluous. Plants are idle and stocks remain unsold because, for reasons known or obscure, the distributive system has broken down. Mr. Chase is one of those who thinks that the economic mechanism can be set going again only by stimulating consumer buying and spending—in other words by increasing wages and reducing the sums available for investment purposes—disregarding the effect upon producers' profits.

If, however, the larger income of the consumers, who are for the most part the workers of the country, is obtained by destroying profits, how is employment, which is the source of buying power, to be provided? Furthermore, if production for profit is no longer a determinant of future industrial development, how is the buying power of an undisciplined body of consumers to be organized and used to direct producing activities? The methods of mass consumption that Mr. Chase proposes to balance against mass production certainly will have to be devised by supermen, if they are to provide a safer guide than the directive plan that has heretofore been relied upon—that is, production for profit.

Brown University has discontinued the bachelor of philosophy degree, possibly having concluded that it takes marriage to make a philosopher of a man.

Conditions are becoming serious when a bonehead minority can enforce its will by organizing troops.

There is an alarming increase of reformers. Won't some one please step forward and save us from being saved?

A Parade of the Past From the Files of The Post.

TWENTY YEARS AGO TODAY.

THE AUSTRIAN AMBASSADOR to London prepared to leave England, which indicated that a state of war existed between the two countries. London newspaper proprietors became worried, as there was only enough print paper on hand to last six weeks.

THE GERMAN ARMY moved north of Liege into the heart of Belgium, their exact destination remaining unknown. Along their Maestricht-Liege front the Germans introduced a new phase in the war by intrenching.

THE KAISER again asked Belgium to let the German troops pass through their country, pointing out Germany had no quarrel with Belgium, and no desire to be at war with her. The Belgian government again refused the German request.

SINCE THE START of the war the German merchant marine has suffered serious losses in vessels captured by England and the allied forces. It was reported 53 German ships had been captured.

That Burma Girl.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I do not think John Hix should be allowed to take liberties with Rudyard Kipling's poem, "On the Road to Mandalay," and get away with it.

"Strange as it may seem," Mr. Kipling does not say, or intimate, that "the old Maulmein pagoda" looks eastward to the sea. It was the Indian girl who was doing the looking. When Kipling does say the pagoda was looking on the sea, he says "lazily" and not "eastward." Moreover, the flying fishes do play good and plenty when the dolphins get after them, whether in the Bay of Bengal or elsewhere.

Finally, Mr. Kipling does not say "The dawn comes up like thunder outer China 'cross the bay." Any one knows in what direction the dawn comes up, and Mr. Kipling, having in mind the suddenness of the oncoming dawn, compares it to the appalling swiftness of the thunderstorms that sweep the Bay of Bengal, coming in shore at Mandalay as if "outer China 'cross the bay."

"The More You've Got."

To the Editor of The Post: Sir: Kingfish and smaller fry want better distribution of wealth. But if wealth were divided equally among all men, the "money makers" would soon regain their former shares. Again, double a man's salary and he will soon want it redoubled. Wants are increased by satisfying them.

He who has nothing is more content than a millionaire. A satisfied poor man is rich; but an unsatisfied millionaire is poor.

Some business man says he can't pay high wages and keep his business running. He means that he can't pay high wages and at the same time make an extra profit. Some farmer says that he sells his products at a loss. He means that he sells them at reduced profits. Both business man and farmer want to get rich. But their wants will always keep them poor.

Let us not forget where this motto appears:: "In God We Trust."

Pro Bargeronism and Con.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I nominate for the Hall of Fame F. F. Weston, of Forest Glen, Md., for his excellent suggestion in The Post of August 9 on Mr. Bargeron. But is Europe far enough away? I recommend he push on to Thibet for permanent abode and try his smart alecky stuff on the lamas. "Clever and sophisticated." Bah! This from one who enjoys every other portion of your paper.

HELEN HUNT.
Chevy Chase, August 9.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I, too, noted in The Post recently that your columnist, Bargeron, had gone to Europe. I also noted his experience "our first day out" and enjoyed the whole column. I expect to get a great deal of pleasure in "Barging Through Europe With Carlisle Bargeron." I am sorry Mr. Weston does not like him.

E. Q.
Clarendon, Va., August 9.

To the Editor of The Post—Sirr After reading F. F. Weston's pointless criticism of Mr. Bargeron, let me wish your columnist a pleasant trip and a speedy return to Washington.

Puzzled!

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial entitled "Those Who Will Pay" regrets the execution of a murderess on the ground that it will deprive her children of her maternal care. I do not quite see how any children would profit by the care of a mother who had coldbloodedly murdered their father.

LAFAYETTE KEARSLEY,
Washington, August 11.

The Somber Problem of Relief.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am writing to you in regard to two letters in The Post of August 4, under the caption "Local Relief as Seen by the Helpless," which I know are true, as I am on relief myself.

There is a great need for some one to get behind these conditions and see that people needing help get proper relief. In all due respect, not everyone can get everything they need at once, but that is different from ignoring you altogether.

For instance, I recently moved from one place owing 6 weeks' rent, $30, and my rent was paid for two weeks. Now my rent has lapsed 2 weeks, and no results yet. I am only getting two days a week $5.55 to support self and wife, which is hardly enough to pay for food. We have been to Third and C streets three times and Commissioner Allen's office three times, and no results yet. I have had letters acknowledged from the Commissioner's office. But I can not see the case worker nor will she call. So you see what a difficult situation we are in, and I suppose others are in, and I suppose others are having the same experience.

I am, in other words, having to owe money all round because I can not get any cooperation from the case worker. I had to have an abscessed tooth out and owe the dentist and owe the druggist for prescription because I felt too bad to wait. I am in need of a further prescription to be refilled and other things, such as clothing, &c.

I am sure that anyone on relief would be only too glad to get a job if one could be gotten. I really believe the people could get more relief, but the money is held back because those in charge want to economize. This is wrong because it deprives people of getting what they should. It would be well if some of the officials were to read the description of the Last Judgment, twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, thirty-first verse.

W. J. CARROLL.
Washington, August 5.

Again: Guides!

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Recently I had the pleasure of visiting with my family in Washington. It was not my first trip to the Nation's Capital and I found the city as beautiful and impressive as ever. I also found, however, that tourists are still harassed and annoyed by a continual series of "expert" guides who insist on offering their services. At practically no time could one walk peacefully down the street without being hailed and instructed on the proper method of gaining entry into the so-called "public buildings." At public buildings I found courteous and informed Government guards who graciously and kindly gave information when it was requested. I never found it either desirable or necessary to employ a professional guide in order to get about.

Can not something be done to curb the practice of the guides soliciting business on the streets? In their place they are a useful group. In my judgment their place does not include their persistently accosting visiting groups with their semipolice gestures and uniforms.

B. S. HOLLIMON,

Pro and Con on "Red-Hunting"

"Professional Patriots."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial entitled "No Place for Radicalism?" in the August 10 issue of The Post is, in my opinion, deserving of the highest praise. It renders a very great service to genuine Americanism by its straight and logical thinking when it exposes the false and misleading utterances of the national head of the American Legion.

There is altogether too much and too loose use of the term "unpatriotic" by officers of various organizations of men and women claiming to stand for the only true Americanism. A flagrant but not unusual example of this was the address of Commander Hayes, who in denouncing what he is pleased to term radicalism, makes no pretense of meeting the essential views expressed by those he regards as radicals. As you so frankly suggest, there must be some cause or justification for this recent growth of radical movements in America, due in part no doubt to the terrible sufferings of millions of our people living in want and fear for lack of employment. The only effective answer must be to find ways for improving our economic set-up.

These professional "patriots" are, in my opinion, a greater menace to our American institutions of liberty under the law than all the radicals in the land.

EDWIN S. POTTER.
Washington, August 10.

Why a Public School?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Apropos your excellent editorial on radicalism and the Constitution, may I ask why a tax-supported public school was opened without charge for use by a private organization? Should not the American Legion pay its own way?

CASSIUS.
Washington, August 10.

Note Where the Power Rests.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial "No Place for Radicalism?" certainly is uncalled for.

There has not been nor is there any intent on the part of any American organization to abridge freedom of speech or the press in any way. But some feel the time has come to put into effect a section of the Constitution that is just as valid as the first amendment. That is section 3 of article 3, dealing with treason:

"1. Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. * * *

"2. The Congress shall have the power to declare the punishment of treason. * * *"

I ask if the present methods of communists, in many cases aliens, do not verge on, if it is not, "levying war" against the United States?

If lining up young and old against American concepts and against American constituted authority, turning admittedly legal strikes into communist skirmishes and battles, regimenting the disaffected into companies and regiments for assault, and bloody assault, on those things America holds dear, is not treason and war, what is it?

As a liberal American I join you in your stand for full freedom of speech and press. I believe with you that others be left free peaceably to advocate even a different form of government. But license of speech and press is something different, especially when it takes a subversive form, when it advocates armed uprising of a minority, largely alien, against constituted governments.

In Other Words.

Postoffice, Monday.

THERE is a new international language in the field. At least, it has, so to speak, just become vocal: Its publicity department is just beginning to get through to our desk. So it may be new to you, also.

It is Interlingua.

We rather admire its sponsors. Their general idea—the idea of a common "auxiliary tongue" among all nations—has come up so often, and so often gone down.

It entertained Descartes and Leibnitz. During the last two centuries, over 300 systems have been hopefully propounded, yet the average human being persists in employing his own or some other "natural" language, for the purposes of international communication. It must take real courage to espouse System No. 301.

* * * *

We ourseves have never denied the usefulness of a universal language, though we have never gone so far as the zealots who say it would prevent war. Considering the way we quarrel with our friends, we have never felt that the less people understand one another, the less——

* * * *

However, that's not the point. The point is that we didn't see the use of inventing a fixed language (any synthetic language, we believed, would have to be more or less fixed) when there were already extant several fixed languages—if we may be permitted to speak of dead languages as extant.

There was Greek and Latin.

We were all for Greek, because that was the world's "interlingua" when the world was at what a good many wise men consider its best. Other partisans, who knew almost as much as we did, were equally strong for Latin.

* * * *

And, of course, there was something to be said for Sanscrit, too.

* * * *

Then there was, for a long time, the enthusiast who didn't see why the universal language should be fixed. He merely wanted a living language—usually his own—adopted by the whole of mankind, and the advocates of French to that end really had all the honors at one stage of the game. Theirs, anyhow, was the international language of diplomacy until Woodrow Wilson (wasn't it?) insisted on English being given an equal show with French in the proceedings of the League of Nations. Immediately came a clamor for "English everywhere," raised, odd as it may seem, by Americans and Britishers who had international minds, but who had no language save that to which they were born.

* * * *

Thus nationalism invaded the international language cause. The cause had to turn to artificial languages in a search for unity.

* * * *

Two such languages were ready: Volapuk and Esperanto. But unity wasn't their outstanding characteristic.

* * * *

Johann Martin Schleyer completed the former tongue in 1880. It was certainly logical; it was certainly rich in verbal forms, and the garden of its vocabulary was simply full of roots from a splendid variety of "real" languages. But it was too much of a job.

Its very name demonstrates what fun Schleyer must have had in making it—and what work everybody else had in making it out. "Vol" meant "world," a contraction, we were assured, from the English word "world." The "a" was added as "the connecting vowel of compounds," and "puk" was—as you must see at a glance—simply the English word "speech" slightly "reduced and latered."

But there was a real Volapuk vogue. In 1889 there were about 125 Volapuk societies scattered over the world, publishing a fifth of that number of magazines for the dissemination of the language. It was killed by the growth of Esperanto.

* * * *

Esperanto was the concoction of Zamenhof, a Polish doctor, whose grammar followed more closely than Volapuk the grammars of natural languages, but was a considerable distance from most of them, at that. It, too, had roots gathered from many occidental languages, but it, too, just somehow seemed a good deal better in theory than in practice.

There was a French Society for the Propaganda of Esperanto. There were world congresses from 1905 until 1914. After the interruption of the great war, there were a few more congresses. And yet——

And yet there was an end of Esperanto.

* * * *

So now it is Interlingua which engages the attention of these optimists.

* * * *

Let them speak for themselves—in every sense:

"Interlingua es lingua universale que omne persona in modo facile scribe et intellige sine usu de speciale studio. Libro in Interlingua es diffuso supra plure regione de Europa, America, Africa, Australia et Asia ubi cultura occidentale es noto."

* * * *

It is "a modernized international Latin without inflections," the creation, in large part, of Dr. G. Peano, a professor of mathematics in the University of Turin. It "adopts every word common to English, German, French, Spanish, Italian, Portuguese, Russian, and every Anglo-Latin word," and "every word which exists in Latin has the form of the Latin stem or root or radical."

It attempts to achieve the most charming distinction of Chinese: that of being "practically grammarless." It has no prefixes, suffixes, declensions, conjugations. You just take, "as the stem or root of nouns, the Latin ablative"—and there you are.

* * * *

The Interlingua enthusiasts are perfectly sure that their language is going to be popular with scientists, international lawyers, diplomats. We wish those enthusiasts well. But we are not quite convinced—not quite.

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall

Bookworm Questions.

BY wide popular acclaim—comprising, I believe, my godfather's cousin, my elevator boy James, and a gentleman in Tulsa, Okla.—this column breaks out again in a frenzy of interrogation. The following bookish queries were compiled by all devious means, by everything from snatching gratefully at the suggestions of friends to reading through a dictionary. Some of them just came to me in the night.

THEO. HALL

Which reminds me how, in all innocence, I troubled our genial music critic, Mr. Ray C. Brown, with my last questionnaire. I'd asked modestly for two novel titles containing five words. He got to thinking about that and he couldn't stop, and he came in a couple of days later, pretty wan, with a list of five-word titles numbering 192!

The answers to today's questions, which appear tomorrow, won't pretend to that encyclopedic range—they'll be merely what's asked for. Anything else that's right is, of course, right. But be warned that some of the questions are very, very ticklish, indeed.

* * * *

1. To begin on our own doorstep, what well-known playwright was the assistant dramatic editor of The Washington Post at the age of 16?

2. Name 14 works of fiction or biography, published during the past year, whose titles contain the names of parts of the human body.

3. What is the constant peculiarity of S. S. Van Dine's titles? I mean something more than the fact that they're all "murder cases."

* * * *

4. What authors have last names which are synonyms for:
an unmarried, adult male;
cunning, crafty, subtle;
an urgent request or demand for payment;
a strong wind between a stiff breeze and a hurricane;
to utter vocal music;
a large, wild carnivorous canine;
a fit of sulks or anger;
able, strong, valiant (archaic).

5. What was Katherine Mansfield's real name?

* * * *

6. How do you properly pronounce the names of the following authors and publishers: Oliver Onions, P. G. Wodehouse, Arthur Guiterman, A. & C. Boni, Lytton, Strachey, Royal Cortissoz, Ginn & Co., Joseph Hergesheimer, A. Knopf, Baroness Orczy, Joseph Wood Krutch, Ernest Peixotto, St. John Ervine, Compton Mackenzie, and Hilaire Belloc?

7. Name and give the author of books published during the last year whose titles contain the following cardinal numbers (that is: "One, two," not "first, second"). Some of them, as noted in parentheses, demand more than a single answer.

One (6); two (5); three (4); four (2); five, six; seven (3); eight; nine (2); ten (2); 13 (2); 18; 20; 33; 40; 1,000,000 (3); 10,000,000 100,000,000; 1,000,000,000.

* * * *

8. In almost any English novel you're likely to come across the following British family names. How are they correctly pronounced?

Ayscough; Barfreston; Baugh; Beauchamp; Beaulieu; Beaworthy; Belvoir; Bohun; Bourchier; Burghclere; Charwell; Cholmondeley; Cockburn; Cogenhoe; Colclough; Colquhoun; Dalziel; Death; Decies; Geoghegan; Gilkes; Hayhurst; Hoey; Jacques; Magheramorne; Mainwaring; Marjoribanks; Ponsonby; Saint Leger; Taliaferro; Tuohy; Vaux; Wauchope; Wrensfordsley; and Wriothesley.

9. What living American author and journalist, going on with work under his own name once, achieved immense popularity for work done under a pen name which was kept secret from the public and even from his publishers for ten years-Dates of that secrecy are 1906-1916.

* * * *

What I'd like to know, since I didn't make up a query until I had the answer first, is whether you found these questions hard as nails or easy as pie. If you'd be kind enough to tell me, they can be stretched next time either way.

German Unification Certain to Continue

Hitler's Third Reich Has Carried Bismarck's Centralization Work to Logical Conclusion; Only Catastrophe Could Break Up Nation.

By Lothrop Stoddard.

WHAT will happen to Hitler's Third Reich no one can confidently predict. It is possible that before long the Nazi regime may give place to another government quite different in character and policy. Yet one Nazi achievement of fundamental importance will probably endure. This is the transformation of Germany's political structure from a federation of historic states into a closely unified, highly centralized government much like that of France since her great revolution.

The history of modern Germany has been essentially a slow and painful evolution toward political unity. Down to Bismarck's wars against Austria and France, Germany was little more than a geographical expression.

Germany before Bismarck was a mere bundle of practically independent states of all sorts and sizes, ranging from giant Prussia down to municipal republics known as free cities and tiny principalities of a quaintly feudal flavor.

The German Empire proclaimed at Versailles in 1871 was a compromise between old and new. It gave Germany an effective central government but left the states a large measure of local autonomy. The empire likewise did not obliterate strong local patriotisms, especially in the larger states like Bavaria, which continued to be ruled by their historic dynasties.

Great War Welded Nation Into Spiritual Unity.

THE Great War did much to weld Germans into a spiritual unity. For four years they fought shoulder to shoulder on many battle-fronts against a hostile world. Though they lost the war, the very harshness of the Versailles treaty made Germans feel that they must stand or fall together.

Though the Weimar Republic left the states intact, the princely rulers were gone, and with them vanished dynastic loyalty as an active political factor. Economic disasters like the fall of the mark hit all sections, so that people thought more and more as fellow-Germans, and less as Prussians, Bavarians or Saxons.

Party factions under the republic waged bitter strife with one another, to be sure; yet these factions transcended state lines. Socialists, Communists and Nazis were found all over Germany and worked together without much thought of their state origins. Nowhere were there local parties of any importance.

As soon as the National Socialists got control, they proceeded to strengthen their grip in every possible way. And the obvious policy was to set up an all-powerful nation-wide political machine. Therefore, having been voted almost absolute power by a complaisant Reichstag, the Nazis promptly stripped the states of all political authority. Though not yet formally abolished, the states became mere administrative units ruled by officials appointed by the central government at Berlin. To use the favorite Nazi phrase, the states were "coordinated" (Gleichgeschaltet) with the Third Reich.

No Room in New Reich For Local States.

WHAT this meant has been officially explained by no less a personage than Dr. Frick, Reich minister of the interior, who announced in a radio address early this year: "The historical task of our times is the creation of a strong national unitary state to replace the former federal state. There is no longer room in the new Germany for local states (Laender) in the former sense or for state frontiers. The state governments from today are merely administrative bodies of the Reich."

That is still the situation today. But obviously it is a transition phase which can not continue indefinitely. Once grant that Germany is to become strongly centralized, and the continued existence of those local divisions, of all shapes and sizes, and sometimes interlaced in the oddest fashion, become administrative absurdities.

The logical outcome is their abolition in favor of new administrative units approximately uniform in size and consciously disregarding the old state frontiers. In short, the administrative units of a centralized Germany would be very much like French departments.

The whole parallel between contemporary Germany and revolutionary France is indeed a striking one. France before the great revolution of 1789 was a mosaic of historic provinces, large and small, with local privileges and peculiarities, and with a good deal of local feeling. Revolutionary France, like present-day Germany, was threatened by foreign foes and was faced with grave domestic problems. The new rulers of France felt that a strongly unified central government could alone safeguard the revolution.

French Department Succeeded Provinces.

SO THEY proclaimed as their guiding principle: The French Republic, One and Indivisible! And, in accordance with that principle, the old provinces disappeared in favor of departments which were mere administrative divisions ruled by prefects appointed from Paris—henceforth the seat of all real power and authority.

Furthermore, that sweeping change in France's political structure was destined to survive all governmental changes. Even when the Bourbons came back after the fall of Napoleon, the historic provinces were not revived. And it is inconceivable that any future change of regime in France would seriously alter the basic structure of French political life.

Now is not a similar trend obvious in Germany today? The combined pressure of foreign and domestic problems is forcing the Germans to centralize their government and make it efficient regardless of historic tradition or local sentiment.

Of course the Nazis are running the new political machine for their own special purposes. But their possible successors, no matter how much their aims might differ, would find this machine too useful to scrap. They would be literally compelled to take it over and run it, substantially unaltered.

Only Some Catastrophe Could Break Up Germany.

THE only way in which the historic German states could be revived would seem to be in consequence of some catastrophic break-up of German national unity itself. If Germany should be invaded and devastated by foreign war, or if civil war should rage on a grand scale, the resultant chaos might cause Germany to fly to pieces.

That is just what France has always hoped. Ever since 1914, many Frenchmen have openly urged the splitting of the Reich into two or even three independent units, together with a systematic revival of all the old local principalities.

Yet that is precisely the reason why most Germans, regardless of party, back the Nazis in their centralizing policy. Germans feel that national unity is the one thing that will save them and bring them to better times.

Therefore, short of some cataclysm which would throw not only Germany but all central Europe into the melting-pot, we can confidently anticipate that the federal principle has become as outmoded in Germany as it is in France—and for similar reasons. The Nazis have thus carried the unifying work of Bismarck to its logical conclusion.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

"A Summer Garland."

Mr. Robinson Smith, an American scholar who lives in Nice, France, has published important works dealing with subjects as different as Spanish literature, the origin of the Homeric poems, and the manuscripts of the New Testament. He is fond of making collections of epigrams and wise sayings, which he occasionally prints in small private editions, and distributes among his friends. I have just received one of these pamphlets, called "A Summer Garland." Here are some of the quotations:

Eastern Proverb: I was without shoes and I murmured, till I met a man without feet.

Plato: Man, that hath magnificence of mind, and is the spectator of all time and all existence.

Coleridge: Plato, that plank from the wreck of Paradise, cast on the shore of idolatrous Greece.

Pericles: Make Athens beautiful, for beauty is now the victorious power in the world.

Bunyan: The pilgrim they laid in a large upper chamber, whose window opened toward the sunrising. The name of the chamber was Peace, where he slept till break of day, and then he awoke and sang.

Dante: In His will is our peace.

Wordsworth: We live by admiration, hope, and love.

Thoreau: He would have left a Greek accent slanting the wrong way, and righted up a fallen man.

Coleridge: Lady Beaumont told me that when she was a child, previously to saying her prayers, she endeavored to think of a mountain or great river or something great, in order to raise up her soul and kindle it.

Goethe:

Who never ate his bread in tears,
Nor through the sorrow-laden hours
Sat nightly face to face with fears—
He knows you not, ye Heavenly Powers.

Martineau: Those deep and simple pieties on which the sanctity of life depends.

Daniel: This is the thing that I was born to do.

St. John of the Cross: Where there is no love, put love and you will find love.

Micah: And what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, and to walk humbly with thy God.

D. C. Soldiers Are Reviewed By Commander

Lieut. Col. Nevitt Honored for Fourteen Years of Service.

Camp Albert C. Ritchie, Cascade, Md., Aug. 12 (Spl.).—Clouds and mist rolled across the parade ground here this afternoon as the District National Guard troops were reviewed by Col. John W. Oehmann, commanding the 121st engineers, and Lieut Col. Peyton G. Nevitt, assistant adjutant general of the District Militia.

Today was Veteran's Day in honor of veteran officers of the old Third Infantry.

Lieut. Col. Nevitt was presented a medal for 14 years, meritorious service as assistant adjutant general, Col. Oehmann making the presentation.

Despite inclement weather, approximately 3,000 friends and relatives of the men visited the camp.

Tomorrow, C. H. Warrington, president of the Warrington Motor Co. in Washington, will be a guest of Col. Oehmann, camp commander. When the Second Battalion of the Engineers parades, the band will play a march written by Meyer Goldman in Warrington's honor. He recently received the Washington Aero Club medal for being the outstanding civilian in aviation.

2,300-Mile Voyage In Sailboat Begins

Youths Start for Havana Without Power.

Key West, Fla., Aug. 12 (AP).—With a departing hope for favoring winds and tides on their 2,300-mile voyage, Leicester Hemingway, 22, brother of the author, Ernest Hemingway, and Bob Kilmo, 21, of Mount Vernon, Iowa, sailed away to the south today.

Their 18-foot sailboat, without auxiliary power, was expected to encounter the strongest waves and currents of the long voyage today as the young sailors nosed the craft across the Straits of Florida to Havana.

From Havana Hemingway plans to sail along the outer rim of the Caribbean, coasting from island to island until they reach Venezuela. They may return here by the western coast, later going on to New York.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Camera!

America is photograph goofy. Its general aspect is that of a Nation of mental delinquents grinning into a camera.

* * * *

Let a newsreel or a newspaper photographer appear anywhere and scores of people will drop whatever they are doing and devote all their energies to behaving like idiots for press and screen.

* * * *

A notorious bandit and cop killer is slain in a city street, and hundreds of citizens adjust their hats, fix their neckties and stand on their tiptoes so they will be shown in the pictures with the corpse.

* * * *

A distracted woman leaps from a hotel roof and a mob of so-called human beings fights to get into the picture when the photographers arrive.

* * * *

A pitched battle between troops and rioters takes place in an open road, and 60 per cent of the people shown in the photographs are smiling and waving at the camermen!

* * * *

Have we, the people, gone crazy? Or is this a Government of the camera addicts by the camera addicts and for the camera addicts?

* * * *

There oughta be a law! The depression would be over in America if the millions of people who are standing around having their pictures taken would go back to work.

* * * *

What the country needs is fewer 5-cent faces.

* * * *

What to do? That's the problem. For the present a little honest caption writing over the picture might help. For example: Proper caption for a picture of a mob of silly looking Americans surrounding a wounded gunman.

* * * *

Reading from left to right—John P. Plotz, well-known merchant prince, taking time out on an important directors' meeting to get his mug some wide circulation; Lester Biffle, office efficiency expert, taking an extra half hour from duties in his determination to get into the news reels; Dr. Gus Chizzleby, noted surgeon, letting his patients suffer while he makes sure his funny face makes a chain of newspapers and 4,000 picture houses, &c, &c.

Not how he dresses, or parts his hair,
Not if his cheeks have a healthy flush,
Not if he's witty and debonaire,
But—how does he act in a subway crush?

Samson Can Pull Down the Temple, But Always Perishes

By Robert Quillen

The curse of America is price-cutting. It helps nobody and harms everybody.

Any initial success gained by the price-cutter is inevitably followed by failure, for he violates economic law and law always triumphs in the end.

Here is the way it works:

There are 40 gadget makers, with factories all over America. Keen competition has made them remarkably efficient. They have no price agreement, and each is eager to outdo the others.

But their manufacturing costs, which include raw material, labor and overhead, are approximately the same, which means that all of them must maintain a certain selling price in order to make a profit.

So long as they can make a profit, they help to support our civilization. They provide jobs for many people, in the shops and on the road, and their purchases of raw material provide jobs for many more. Out of their earnings they pay taxes to support the local and National Governments.

Now enter the price-cutter.

He is a new man in the field or one who has failed to get business. Whether he has sold stock or borrowed from banks, the capital of others is tied up in his plant.

Being desperate, or merely stupid and stubborn, he cuts prices to get business. He gets it, of course, but he is cutting his own throat.

He either cheapens his product, which cheats the customer and thus leads to his ruin, or he sells below the cost of production and thus hastens the coming of bankruptcy.

He harms everybody. While he lasts, he takes business from legitimate manufacturers; when he breaks, his ruin leaves his employes without jobs and robs his backers or stockholders of their capital.

It is an economic crime to sell below the cost of production.

And individuals who sell their talent or personal service below the price established by competition and experience are guilty of equal wrong.

They gain nothing by it. Their only reward is contempt for their cheapness. They are "saps." They can't win, for a man who isn't good enough to win by fair means can't make his work more worthy of respect by doing it for nothing.

Midshipmen To Fire Guns

Target Practice Slated Off Virginia Capes All Week.

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 12 (Spl.).—Approximately 900 midshipmen, third and first classmen at the Naval Academy, will participate in target shooting with big guns on the battleships Wyoming and Arkansas, off the Virginia Capes tomorrow, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

They will return to Hampton Roads Friday and return to sea on the following Monday to resume target practice. They are scheduled to leave for Annapolis August 24.

The minesweepers Brant, Tern and Grebe will tow targets. The firing for this week will be at short range and next week at long range.

Rear Admiral Bayne Ellis, commanding the ships, says the middies will man the guns on the ships. They will have a regular Navy gunner in each turret with them. All the heavy work, such as lifting shells and firing the guns, will be done by the middies.

The battleships New York, West Virginia, Mississippi and Tennessee are expected to proceed to sea tomorrow to engage in target practice. Other ships of the battle force will go Tuesday. These ships will be joined Tuesday by the battleship New Mexico, flagship of Admiral Joseph M. Reeves, commander in chief of the Navy afloat.

$1,000,000 Daily Corn Loan Return

Early Payment of U. S. Fund Reported.

Government money advanced to corn growers last winter and spring is returning at the rate of $1,000,000 daily as farmers sell their stored corn nd repay Federl loans, the Agriculturl Adjustment Administration said yesterday.

Loans on corn aggregated $120,647,500, nd at the rate of 45 cents a bushel, covered 256,532,000 bushels of corn. There were 142,368 borrowers.

Repayments already have totaled $26,369,464, although the maturity date has been extended from August 1 to September 1.

Administration officials said the plan resulted in a higher price for all corn and "has illustrated what a loan program can do in storing feed on the farm in years of plenty for the years of shortage."

Piano Sells for $1.

Fitchburg, Mass. (U.P.).—This city sold a piano for $1. Miss Mary E. Bartley, retiring as principal of the Nolan School, asked for an old piano in the building as a keepsake. The school board was prohibited by law from giving away the piano, but sold it to her for $1.

"Jim Hawkins" To Live Anew in Post Carrier

Hero of "Treasure Island" Sought During Run of Film Here.

"Sixteen men on a dead man's chest!
Yo! ho! ho! and a bottle of rum!"

Remember that blood-curdling song from "Treasure Island." Do you recall the nights when you sneaked the light back on in your bedroom in order to devour the final chapters of Robert Louis Stevenson's classic of adventurous boyhood? And your envious admiration of Jim Hawkins, the boy hero of the tale?

Well, somewhere in Washington, among the hundreds of carrier boys who deliver The Washington Post to your door each morning, there is another Jim Hawkins. And The Post, in cooperation with Loew's Palace Theater, is going to find him. That carrier boy, as Jim Hawkins, will pose for the life-sized oil painting which will be reproduced on The Post's calendar for 1935.

To Be Shown at Palace.

Jim Hawkins will be seen at Loew's Palace Theater as Jackie Cooper, famous boy motion-picture star, makes Stevenson's boy hero live again on the silver screen. "Treasure Island," that grand old tale of buccaneers and hidden gold, of sudden danger and cryptic maps, begins at the Palace Friday, and during its showing here, The Post carrier boy who most nearly resembles the character of Jim Hawkins will be selected.

For Jim Hawkins, the lad who left the Admiral Benbow Inn to sail with the cutthroat crew and the Hispaniola, whose bravery and quick wit foiled the villainous plots of Long John Silver and his pirates, might well be any red-blooded American boy, and for this reason, this character has been selected by The Post for its 1935 calendar. Last year, Francis Fairall, a Post carrier, was chosen as the model for Huckleberry Finn, Mark Twain's hero, and thousands of these calendars, on which the painting was reproduced in full color, were distributed.

Charles Dunn Is Artist.

The artist chosen by The Washington Post is Charles Dunn, nationally known artist. Mr. Dunn's Huckleberry Finn, the original of which now hangs in the executive offices of The Post, was viewed by thousands of Washingtonians while it was on display at Loew's Fox Theater.

The final selection of The Post carrier who will act as a model for Jim Hawkins will be made by the public, after carrier boys in each of the 34 sub-stations of The Post have elected one carrier from each station as a model. Ballots may be obtained at the Palace Theater during the run of "Treasure Island."

Jim Hawkins has taken his place among the boy heroes of all time. In "Treasure Island," which was written to please a 15-year-old boy, Lloyd Osbourne, Stevenson has made him the pivot on which the whole plot turns. In the motion picture, Jackie Cooper plays the part of Jim, while Wallace Beery also is prominently cast.

Photographs of representative carrier boys of The Washington Post will be published in The Post in the near future in order that the public may have a better opportunity to judge its selections.

Washington Post carriers also will be guests of Loew's Palace Theater during the showing of "Treasure Island," which has been adjudged one of the finest motion pictures of the year.

Italy Greets Clark Howell

Welcome From Il Duce Is Extended to Aviation Study Group.

Rome, Aug. 12 (AP).—An official welcome on behalf of Premier Mussolini and the Italian air service was extended today to Clark Howell, who arrived from Naples on an aviation mission entrusted to him by President Roosevelt.

Gen. Aldo Pellegrini, second in command of Gen. Italo Balbo's flight to Chicago, extended the greeting on behalf of Il Duce and Giuseppe Valle, chief of the general staff for aviation.

"It was a year ago today," Gen. Pellegrini recalled, "when Marshal Balbo's squadron returned from America, where the kindess, courtesy and enthusiasm of the American people was engraved on the hearts of all our officers."

Gen. Pellegrini told Howell that all possible courtesies of the Italian air force would be extended to him during his tour of aviation study in Italy, which during the next month will include visits to the principal airports and factories, probably including military air manufacturing centers.

A representative of the Italian foreign office extended a welcome to Howell and a group of newspaper publishers who have come to Italy at the invitation of the government to study conditions at first hand. The group is expected to be received by Il Duce.

Stage Is Set For Maryland Political War

Ritchie's Return Awaited for Final Drive in Hot Battle.

Baltimore, Aug. 12 (Spl.).—Battle lines are drawn, the issues—such as they are—have been clarified, and the stage is set for one of the most rip-roaring political wars that Maryland has seen for many, many years.

Of especial interest at this stage of the game are the primary fights that both major parties must go through before the real warfare starts. The primary contests in both Democratic and Republican ranks might well be compared to dress rehearsals in advance of the opening of the big show. And it will be a real show for the voters of Maryland.

The contest for the gubernatorial nomination occupies the principal interest of the voters in both parties. Last Saturday night was the final deadline for filing of candidacies on State tickets, and when midnight struck the Democratic candidates were Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, who seeks a fifth term; Dr. Charles H. Conley, of Frederick, and Mayor Howard W. Jackson, of Baltimore. Republican candidates were United States Senator Phillips Lee Goldsborough, Harry W. Nice and H. Webster Smith.

Hot G. O. P. Fight Due.

In the Republican ring there will be a real rough-and-tumble battle. But in the Democratic ring, from present indications, the fight will be somewhat more refined, with less slugging and less biting in the clinches.

Mayor Jackson has virtually ceased his campaign, and, to all intents and purposes, has withdrawn from the race. Political observers agree he is now playing a waiting game. Exactly what this waiting game will turn out to be will probably be revealed in time.

That leaves Gov. Ritchie and the tireless Dr. Conley to fight it out in the Democratic ring. Dr. Conley, the "wonder man" of the Democratic revolutionists, continues to amaze the Ritchie high command. Persistently and with marked success in many quarters, he pushes his anti-Ritchie drive, in every corner of the State.

Last week Dr. Conley made a swing through the lower Eastern Shore, and is reported to have been met with open arms by the leaders in Somerset, Worcester and Wicomico Counties. This week he will tour southern Maryland.

Ritchie's Return Awaited.

Active resumption of the Ritchie campaign is awaiting the return of the Governor from his vacation trip to France. He is scheduled to sail on August 20, arriving in Baltimore on August 30. That will put him back into the Maryland political arena just 12 days in advance of the primary election on September 12, and in those 12 days he is expected to consolidate the gains that his quietly working political lieutenants have chalked up during his absence.

Other developments in the none-too-exciting Democratic field during the past week was the start of a move to name M. Harry Laib, chairman of the Democratic City Committee of Baltimore, to the post of chairman of the State central committee, in place of J. Enos Ray, of Prince Georges County, who has resigned; and an announcement by former Judge Glenn H. Worthington, of Frederick County, that he is supporting Secretary of State David C. Winebrenner, 3rd, in his fight to retain political control of Frederick County.

Judge Worthington came out of a long political retirement to make the announcement.

Congress Fight.

In Baltimore, two Democratic candidates for the party's nomination to the House of Representatives have been at it hammer and tongs during the week.

Representative Vincent L. Palmisano, who is seeking reelection, offered a letter from Postmaster General Farley, in which Mr. Farley mentioned that "when you return to the Seventy-fourth Congress, I am sure you will be helpful in the furtherance of the new program of social legislation."

Mr. Palmisano pointed to that as an indorsement of his candidacy by Mr. Farley, whereupon Palmisano's opponent, Magistrate John M. Pohlhaus, gave a mighty horse laugh and declared that Mr. Farley's letter was merely a form letter, sent to all members of Congress. It was no more an indorsement of Palmisano, said Mr. Pohlhaus, than a birthday card would have been.

Developments in the Republican arena have been somewhat more diverting. There have been several withdrawals of candidacy, among them that of Harry Phoebus, Somerset County leader, from his campaign for nomination as comptroller on the H. Webster Smith ticket. His withdrawal will permit W. Newton Jackson, of Wicomico County, to run for that place on the Smith ticket.

Another withdrawal was that of Mayor Walter E. Quenstedt, of Annapolis, from the gubernatorial race. Mr. Quenstedt had not made any active campaign, and his retirement was not unexpected; he will run for clerk of the court of appeals on the Harry W. Nice ticket.

New Republican Entries.

Entries into the Republican field include that of C. Wilbur Miller, of Baltimore County, as senatorial candidate on the Nice ticket, and Fred Adkins, of Wicomico County, as candidate for comptroller on the Nice ticket.

Most of the Republican candidates have been actively pushing their campaigns. Senator Goldsborough has just returned to Baltimore after a tour of western Maryland, where his backers say he was enthusiastically received. He is pursuing a policy of making no public speeches, and as a consequence his drive has earned the title of the "silent campaign." He shakes hands with thousands of voters, and talks things over with scores of district leaders, but he stages no rallies and makes no harangues to the multitude.

Mr. Smith is now on a tour of the Eastern Shore. His campaign is just the opposite of Senator Goldsborough's, perhaps the word "noisy" gives the wrong connotation to his drive, but it is at least far from silent. Mr. Smith carries sound trucks and a staff of speakers with him, and at every crossroads village, as well as in the larger towns, he and his associates speak and the sound trucks give out political music.

Mr. Nice spent the week in Baltimore, but he was far from inactive. He will have a full ticket to present to the voters at the primary, and his major achievement has been to line up Mr. Miller as senatorial candidate.

Yes, things are active enough in Maryland political affairs. All that is needed to make the campaign really good is a couple of important political issues. J. C. M.

Tobacco Boom Wins Va. 5th to New Deal

"Mother Nature" Works Hand in Hand With AAA and Voters Are Strong for Roosevelt; Burch's Security Unquestioned.

By C. B. Carr.

Danville, Va., Aug. 12.—"Mother Nature" has worked hand in hand with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration act of the Roosevelt Administration to make the New Deal the most popular idea in government that the people of the Fifth Virginia Congressional District have had in generations.

At least such is the opinion expressed by politicians, business men and farmers who are about to witness a wave of prosperity occasioned by the rising tide of tobacco prices here.

The AAA has reduced the acreage to a point where there is no overproduction of the bright-leaf, flue-cured tobacco of this belt, while an excellent season has resulted in one of the best quality crops in years, it is pointed out.

Danville is the largest city of the Fifth District which also includes Martinsville, North Danville and the counties of Pittsylvania, Henry, Franklin, Patrick, Carroll, Grayson, Halifax, Charlotte and Wythe.

The section is principally agricultural insofar as the counties are concerned, and entirely industrial regarding the cities.

Politics Forgotten.

With business conditions having constantly shown improvement throughout the district during the past year, a Democrat remarked that matters of politics are now of little concern to the rank and file of the people.

Thomas G. Burch (Democrat), of Martinsville, has represented the Fifth District in the House of Representatives since 1930. He is standing for reelection this year and Republican leaders state that he is almost certain to have no opposition at the polls in November insofar as they are concerned. A Republican leader stated that the party had not called a convention to consider the matter of opposing Mr. Burch and that it appears unlikely any action will be taken. He said that the district was normally overwhelmingly Democratic and that the Republicans, so far as he knew, were not considering anyone for the nomination.

Mr. Burch has been a strong advocate of Roosevelt policies and his friends declare that so long as the tobacco farmers are of the opinion that the Administration is benefiting them, and the laboring class feels that the increase in employment is the result of New Deal policies, that the Democratic nominee has nothing to fear at the polls.

Astute Patronage Dealer.

While some Congressmen have gotten themselves into "hot water" over the distribution of patronage, Democratic leaders in this district claim that Representative Burch has been an astute patronage dealer and that, although there have been some disappointed office-seekers, there is little disruption in the party over political jobs.

A striking situation in this district, which one does not find in many of the other Virginia districts, is that the rank and file of the people—business men and the laboring classes—will state without hesitation that they believe the general business conditions are nearly back to normal and that policies of the Roosevelt Administration have been responsible for this change.

Martinsville is a city of about 10,000 population. It is the center of the Henry County furniture industry which claims a yearly business of $25,000,000. The furniture plants in Martinsville and some of the outlying sections are reported going full time and the manufacturers are said to be enjoying a good demand for their products. The city also has other industries which furnish employment to upwards of 1,000 people in the vicinity of Martinsville, in addition to the city population. There is a large cotton mill, and three months ago the Martinsville citizens persuaded a large trousers factory to open a branch there. The branch factory was opened, is now employing 800 girls and expects to add units which will require 1,000 additional girls within the next year, it was stated.

Money Flowing Freely.

"The people of Martinsville have money to spend and they are spending it with the result that all businesses are on a better footing," a prominent business man of the city declared. He pointed out that the Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board opened a liquor dispensary in Martinsville something over a month ago and that it had done about $18,000 business to date.

In Danville, the cotton mills, torn by strikes several years ago over working agreements, are reported operating two shifts a day and employing several thousand workmen. The NRA wage schedule is said to be in effect.

Mr. Burch supported the AAA act during its formative period and has been one of its proudest supporters since then, his friends state. They do not hesitate to add that his action along this line undoubtedly has wedded the agricultural class of the district to him. Under the provisions of the AAA act more than $750,000 was paid out to the tobacco farmers of this district as subsidization for reducing their acreage. This put the tobacco farmer back on his feet, the Democrats declare.

Tobacco farmers in general also are reported as taking a new lease on life this year by reason of their excellent crop and the probability that when the flue-cured tobacco market opens here September 25 the weed will be bringing 27 cents a pound. This will be the highest price in years, they say. Tobacco markets already have opened in the Carolinas and a steady rise in price to the 27-cent mark is believed sure provided the European situation assumes a normal condition. The European situation is going to have a great bearing on tobacco prices here, growers point out, by reason of the fact that from 40 to 60 per cent of the flue-cured tobacco is exported. In other words, they declare that for tobacco to bring a high price in Danville, Europe must have the ability to buy the weed at that figure.

Business Boom Expected.

Several merchants here remarked today that they are preparing for a big business soon after September 25. One merchant said that he was stocking his shelves with more new merchandise than had been the case in years as he believed that once the tobacco farmer gets hold of money he will spend it. A garageman said that a number of the Danville garages are expected to "clean up" as a result of the rising tobacco market. He pointed out that the farmers had been unable to buy automobiles for several years, but added, "Let the farmers get a good price for tobacco and they will be coming into town to trade off the old rattle-trap for a new machine." Another garageman pointed out that used cars had been sluggish on the market for several years, but he believed the increase in tobacco prices would result in most of them being sold to the farmer or his employes.

Out of the entire improved economic situation, Representative Burch is said to not only take a keen delight, but his friends declare that his political stock has probably gone up faster during the past year than that of any other politician in the State. He has already been mentioned as a probable Democratic candidate for Governor in 1937, but when questioned about his probable candidacy, he recently remarked, "Never buy a ticket until the train is ready to start."

Mr. Burch's political wisdom, Democratic leaders freely state, has resuled in his building up a political machine in the district probably stronger than that of his predecessor, the late Rorer A. James, of Danville, which has been so effective that the Republicans have not had a member of their party representing this district in Congress for 30 years, or since the late John R. Brown, of Martinsville, was representative.

Removal of Bridge Asked by Bakery

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 12 (Spl.). Removal of a portion of the iron bridge on Henderson boulevard in this city or payment of damages is asked in a suit filed yesterday by the Cumberland Bakery, Inc., against the State Roads Commission and the mayor and city council of Cumberland.

The plaintiff contends that the bridge above the bakery ruins the bakery's value and that the bridge piers, located in front of the property, take part of its street frontage.

In connection with the Henderson boulevard improvement, the mayor and council of Cumberland recently reimbursed the State Roads Commission in the amount of $100,000.

Dry Vote Fails To Bar Liquor In Rockingham

State Notes Referendum But Goes Ahead With Dispensary There.

By J. K. Irving, Jr.

Lynchburg, Va., Aug. 12.—Exactly what it means in Virginia's political scheme of things to have the county of Rockingham vote itself dry by the decisive margin of 4 to 1, may be estimated by the fact that action by the rural electorate in no way affects the plans of the State Alcoholic Beverage Control Board to establish a store in Harrisonburg, Rockingham's principal population center and home of the county courthouse.

Probably none of the State's 100 counties would have exerted less influence in a local option referendum than Rockingham. The surprise would have been served had the population, by any chance, voted wet. That no concerted effort was made to put over repeal is admitted. The vote stood 2,440 to 558 against the sale of beer and wine.

Rockingham is traditionally dry. No other county of Virginia, perhaps, stands out against alcoholic beverages so emphatically. One of the most obvious reasons is that a large section of the population belongs to the Dunkard sect which is sincerely and uncompromisingly opposed to the traffic in liquor no matter how mild the alcoholic content. This denomination is, of course, potently backed by the Methodist Church. This combination probably will remain unbeatable for many years and a reversal, if it ever comes, would not result from sentiment, but expediency, the political seers feel.

The City Stands Aside.

No reversal is likely. Rockingham is overwhelmingly agrarian. It does not seem possible, therefore, that the commercial element, denied the sale of beers and wines—village and crossroad merchants, filling station and lunch stand keepers—could ever hope to overcome the inherent temper of the countryside.

Besides, Harrisonburg, county seat and clearing house for country produce, is a pleasant little city. County residents love to go there where they can trade anything from a horse to a rooster, and pause to get the "low down" on politics and the markets. The additional attraction of an ABC store will increase the court-day crowds and serve, too, to keep up the general daily average of customers.

Thus it is plain enough that Harrisonburg took much interest, but little part in the county election. Shrewd residents of the prosperous courthouse town saw the buttered side of their bread and quiescently kept it right side up.

Nor was the county any too anxious to join hands. A possibility existed that the up and going young business element might have come out and swung the whole section the wrong way; there was the example furnished by Danville's Young Men's Club, which upset the dry "beans" in the southside city regarded as a prohibition stronghold. It is probable, too, that Rockingham preferred to get what liquor it might use from its "capital's" store rather than to have it flow over the city limits. Apparently it worked out to every one's satisfaction. Anyway, the result stands for practically nothing in the Statewide situation.

Liquor Stores Expand.

Forty odd stores are either established in the State or are in the process of establishment. Most of them are doing good business. Certainly there has been no indication of closing any of them because of failure to maintain a satisfactory sales average.

No one can say how big the chain will become. The ABE board itself doesn't know—75 some say will be the limit, but the logical deduction seems to be that the distribution will be widened so long as the people give sufficient patronage and do not express their opposition by majority votes. The present trend seems to be toward liberalization of existing regulations rather than toward the strict application of every rule at the disposition of the board.

Carroll, Now Agricultural, Once Yielded Gold Nuggets

Heavy Mineral Deposits Mined in County Until Recently.

By James S. Elseman.

Westminster, Md., Aug. 12 (Spl.). Strange as it seems, the saying "there's gold in them thar hills" may be applicable to Carroll County, for not only has one historian cited the discovery of the precious metal here, but "old timers" as well recall that gold nuggets have been found at scattered points in the county.

Today, with Carroll County classed as strictly agricultural, it is hard to realize that less than 100 years ago mining activities were carried on throughout the county. In this respect, the surrounding country is unusual because not only was gold apparently discovered but a variety of other minerals, including copper, soapstone, flint, feldspar, serpentine, iron, cobalt, chrome, asbestos, granite, marble, slate, limestone and brick clay.

References to the discovery of gold are contained in a history of western Maryland, published by J. Thomas Scharf in 1882, in which the author stated that a small quantity of gold had been found in the outcrop at Mineral Hill, near Louisville.

Gold Mine Organized in 1881.

Gold also was reported located on a ridge extending through Manchester, and in 1881 the Parr Ridge Gold and Silver Mining Co. was organized. This venture was not profitable to the owners, but credence can be given to reports of gold discoveries at Mineral Hill, as it forms part of a metalliferous range extending through Montgomery County, where the Maryland Geological Survey reports that in 1849 the first gold was discovered in Maryland, near Sandy Spring.

Other gold deposits also were reported near Great Falls, where one mine was said to have produced between $15,000 and $20,000 in 1890. While specimens of gold found along this range are said to be rich in quality, the deposits are unevenly distributed, which, according to mineralogists, makes it difficult to mine profitably.

Present-day activities are confined to intermittent work at the soapstone quarries at Marriottsville and the operation of several limestone quarries.

Copper Mines There, Too.

Perhaps the most interesting mine in the county is the one located at Mineral Hill, on the late George W. Albaugh estate, owing to its association with the discovery of gold and a connection with Revolutionary War days. According to John Boone, of Westminster, one of the few men now living in the county who actually engaged in mining at Mineral Hill, the "Revolutionary shaft" at the mine derived its name from the fact that iron was obtained here for the manufacture of cannon in preparation for the war.

The copper mines are in the eastern part of the county, the largest ones on the property of the late Charles W. King, near Finksburg, and the Springfield mine on the Frank Beasman property, near Eldersburg. At the Finksburg mine, where operations were stopped before the Civil War a piece of copper weighing 1,10 pounds, the largest of record at that time, was mined. The Springfield mine was worked until 1886.

An interesting fact concerning the metalliferous range, referred to by Scharf as extending from the northern part of Cecil County through Harford, Baltimore, Carroll, Howard and Montgomery counties, is that a number of years ago the late George Trinawith, an uncle of John Boone, decided to explore the range and set out on foot with only a compass as guide. His explorations finally led him to Tennessee, where a copper mine at Ducktown, discovered by him, is still reported in operation.

Iron ore was found at a number of points in the county with the majority of the old workings located from Lineboro, near the Pennsylvania line, southwesterly for a number of miles. Small quantities of magnetic oxide of iron, the richest of iron ores, was found in the eastern part of Carroll County. Iron formerly mined near Westminster was shipped to Pennsylvania and New York, and the ruins of an old iron-furnace still can be seen on the B. F. Shriver Co. property at Avondale.

In addition to the copper mined at Finksburg, which consisted of yellow or pyritous copper and still richer quartz, called purple copper ore, sulphuret of cobalt was found, the only discovery of this mineral made in the State, according to records.

Edison Offer Recalled.

It is thought these cobalt deposits led an engineer, employed by the late Thomas A. Edison, to believe that aluminum could be found at Mineral Hill. According to John Boone, the late George W. Albaugh was offered $5,000 by representatives of Mr. Edison for a lease on the Mineral Hill property about 25 years ago when aluminum was first coming into demand. The offer was refused, however, and there is no record of any subsequent attempt to locate aluminum at the mine.

In the southeastern part of the county, where Mineral Hill is located, mineralogists also report an unusual condition where, within a radius of 3 miles of Marriottsville, five minerals—feldspar, flint, soapstone, limestone and asbestos—have been located.

The bluish-cast flint found in this locality was said to have been the object of a Nation-wide search, conducted by the Government during the last war, and was mined until the conflict ended.

Local authorities assert the major mining projects in the county were suspended due to discovery of the iron ore fields at Pittsburgh, copper mines in the Northwest, and the passage of a low tariff bill during the Cleveland Administration. When copper mining in Carroll County was at its height, approximately 30 tons a week were mined at Finksburg and sold for $50 a ton at the smelting works in Baltimore, while the output at the Springfield Mine in 1850 totaled $18,000.

Grave of Washington's Niece Restored By G. A. R. Chapter

Virginia Asked to Place Historical Marker on Highway.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Berryville, Va., Aug. 12.—Fort Loudoun Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Winchester, has announced it has located the grave of Mrs. Betty Lewis Carter, niece of George Washington, at North Hill, the home of Maurice F. Castleman, near here. The broken grave stone has been restored through efforts of the chapter's historic spots committee.

Mrs. Carter's last resting place was found among a grove of black walnut trees, overlooking the Shenandoah River. Beside her are buried her three children, Mrs. Sarah C. Peyton and Elizabeth W. and Edward Carter. The original brick gravestone and marker had been disturbed by cattle. The committee, headed by Mrs. George H. Heist, had the gravestone cemented in the original brick in a foundation 18 inches below the ground, bracing the walls with iron rods.

The grave of Mrs. Carter is situated only a short distance from Highway No. 54. The Virginia commission on conservation and development has been requested to place a historical marker, reciting the fact that Mrs. Carter's grave is at the entrance to North Hill.

Mrs. Carter lived at North Hill for some years. Her death occurred a few months before the arrival at Audley, nearby, of Mrs. Eleanor Parks Lewis, nee Nellie Custis, Washington's adopted daughter. The gravestone at Mrs. Carter's grave bears a bit of history regarding family connections.

It reads:

"In memory of Mrs. Betty Carter, relick of the late Charles Carter, Esq. She was born in the town of Fredericksburg on the 22d day of February, 1765, and departed this life on Good Friday, the 9th of April 1830, aged 65 years. She was the daughter of Mrs. Betty Lewis, only sister of Gen. George Washington. In the death of this amiable and pious lady, the poor have lost a zealous friend and religion a bright example of redeeming faith."

College Heads Plan FERA Aid For Students

Virginia Schools Hold Council on Jobs Tomorrow.

By Howard Turner.

Charlottesville, Va., Aug. 12. Presidents of a score of Virginia colleges and universities will meet here tomorrow at the University of Virginia to discuss the FERA student aid program with Brent D. Allinson, who is coordinating student relief work in Virginia and other States.

Dr. Allinson is to explain the major objectives of the program, and suggest how the 2,000 jobs allotted to needy Virginia students may be best administered in the several schools. John Lloyd Newcomb, president of the University of Virginia, who today returned from a European trip, will confer with the group.

The conference is being held in connection with the opening here tomorrow of the eight-day training institute called by the educational division of the FERA for workers in Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia and the District of Columbia. This is one of 13 regional gatherings to be held throughout the United States to instruct personnel in the proposed FERA adult educational projects.

Study Type of Work.

Following a morning session of college heads, Dr. Allinson will hold an afternoon meeting with community, municipal and educational officials to determine what socially desirable work students may participate in away from the college grounds.

The Federal student relief program provides for jobs in every non-profiting institution of higher learning, the number of jobs being based on 12 per cent of total enrollment. A student may earn up to $20 per month for work not to exceed 30 hours a week. Under provisions of the grant, half of the jobs must be given to new students.

In addition to employment within the college grounds, relief officials plan to provide opportunities for useful work in the immediate vicinity. Wherever possible, qualified students will be used in the adult education program.

Adult Education Council.

Phases of emergency education for adults will be explained in the institute sessions. State supervisors, emergency teachers, and others attending will hear of the administrative and teaching duties and responsibilities of leaders.

Among the projects to be attempted are classes for adult illiterates, vocational training, vocational rehabilitation, general adult education, workers' education; parent education and emergency nursery schools. It is proposed to require all adults on relief, who are in need of education, to attend FERA classes.

C. F. Klinefelter, assistant director of the educational division of the FERA and Dr. Lewis A. Wilson, assistant commissioner of education for the State of New York, will speak.

Week's Program.

Dr. Sidney B. Hall, State superintendent of public instruction, will report on emergency education in Virginia. Other reports will be presented by Maude E. Aiton, principal of the Webster Americanization School, for the District of Columbia; W. W. Trent, West Virginia superintendent of schools, for West Virginia, and G. H. Van Dorp, State adult education supervisor for Maryland.

Prof. John A. Rorer, head of extension service at the University of Virginia, will preside. Prominent educational authorities will lead the discussions.

Tuesday's sessions will be devoted to illiteracy. On Wednesday vocational training will be considered, on Thursday parent and child health education, on Friday vocational rehabilitation and education for colored adults, and on Saturday workers' education.

In the following week, general adult education will be discussed on Monday, and the relation of the community to emergency education will be taken up in the final session Tuesday, August 21.

New Walkout Begun in Cuba

Bombings Also Mark First Anniversary of Machado Regime's Fall.

Havana, Aug. 12 (U.P.).—A series of bombings and a general communications strike marked the first anniversary today of the end of the Machado regime in Cuba.

Two women were injured seriously when a bomb exploded in the Nationalist Political Club. Police searched all automobiles and pedestrains in the vicinity.

Gerardo Machado, exiled after a bloody revolution, is reported a refugee at Santo Domingo—a fugitive from Cuban justice which would try him on charges of murder in connection with the deaths of many Cubans shot by the dreaded porristas (government gunmen) or fed to the sharks.

Residents in Guanabocoa, outside Havana, were panic-stricken when three bombs exploded there during the morning.

Simultaneously, the electric power was cut off. The power plant workers walked out in sympathy with the communications strike. The communications strike tied up the capital, but the workers in the main were orderly.

President of Uruguay To Visit Vargas of Brazil

Rio de Janeiro, Aug. 12 (AP).—President Getulio Vargas began preparations today for the coming visit of President Gabriel Terra of Uruguay on August 18, a visit interpreted in some quarters as a step toward an exclusive commercial combine of Brazil, Argentina and Uruguay.

In May, 1935, Vargas himself will set sail for Buenos Aires, returning the visit which President Justo of Argentina made here in 1933. Although Vargas had intended to make the visit this year, it was learned that congressional and state elections in Brazil will keep him at home while the Eucharistic Congress is in session at Buenos Aires.

DESPITE Civil Service ratings and long years of experience, more than a thousand Internal Revenue employes who were formerly with the Prohibition Bureau or alcoholic unit of Department of Justice face loss of their jobs December 1. This is due to the McKellar rider to the 1935 emergency appropriation act, governing appointments at Internal Revenue.

Regarded as discriminatory and unconstitutional, the provision follows:

"Provided, that after December 1, 1934, no part of the appropriation made herein or heretofore made for the fiscal year 1935 shall be used to pay the salary of any person formerly employed as investigator, special agent, senior warehouseman, deputy prohibition administrator, agent, assistant attorney, assistant prohibition administrator, senior investigator, deputy production administrator, storekeeper or gauger, or any other position in the Prohibition Bureau or Alcoholic Beverage Unit, Department of Justice, who was separated from the service of such bureau or unit between June 10, 1933, and December 31, 1933, while in any such position in the Treasury Department, unless and until such person shall be appointed thereto as a result of an open, competitive examination to be hereafter held by the Civil Service Commission."

Civil Service Commission is now receiving applications (closing date is August 20) for examination for the positions of special investigator at $2,900 a year and investigator at $2,600 a year for service in Alcohol Tax Unit, Internal Revenue. An applicant's eligibility for either or both positions to be determined by his qualifications and final rating, the commission announces.

There is no provision in the McKellar rider to compel the Civil Service Commission to hold examinations.

If examinations, other than the one for investigators, are contemplated, they will of necessity be for dozens of varieties—clerks, typists, stenographers, accountants, statisticians, &c.—the registers for which are already overcrowded. The expense on the Government for such examinations would amount to several thousand dollars.

Two Government employes who possess enviable talents. Left, Miss Lee Wallace, of Fairview, N. J., is a technical stenographer in Inspection Division, Public Works Administration. Miss Wallace is a professional tennis player, artist and musician. Right, Miss Mayme H. Hamrick, of Huntington, W. Va., is an attorney in Division of Investigation, Justice. Miss Hamrick, who attended George Washington University, practiced law in Huntington, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia before coming to Washington.

This law is seen as a precedent for future legislation to compel thousands throughout the service to qualify again for the positions they have held for years. In other words, such laws would open up additional positions for political appointees.

The Joint Committee for Unity of Government Employes will meet tonight at 8 o'clock at the Ebbitt Hotel to receive reports on the Donovan hearing, Miss Bertha Blair, Labor, chairman, announces.

Check Payments Opposed.

Staggered pay days and paying by check is scored by two employe organizations in resolutions adopted at special meetings. Labor Department Lodge No. 12, American Federation of Government Employes requests the Central Labor Union to ascertain what Washington business firm is responsible for the suggestion and thoroughly investigate that firm's eligibility for the union's Unfair List. L. A. Brown is president of Lodge No. 12.

Internal Revenue Lodge No. 47, the largest District unit of AFGE, charges that private industry "desires to influence Governmental machinery in designating staggered pay days." Under direction of its president, LaRue Tanner, the group went on record as strongly opposing payments by check and any change in pay days.

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

Blackie Can Just Smell That Old Ham

Anybody that lives in town knows that a lot of people buy their meat already cooked when they don't feel like doing their own cooking in a hot kitchen at home. The Creek Folks were getting in the same habit, and when they heard of anything that was already cooked, they didn't waste any time going after it.

About the biggest subject they ever talked on at Blackie house was good things to eat. Jay Bird went around a good deal, and he was always looking in at somebody's back porch or kitchen window to see what the people were doing, and he had learned to be a pretty good cook. At least, he knew lots about the things that other people cooked, and could tell how they prepared them and how long they were left on the fire.

It was a good deal the same way with Jocko, for when he was a boy and lived in the house with his good mistress, he stayed around the kitchen a lot, and like Jay Bird, had learned a good deal about cooking.

They were talking about such things and they all agreed that they ought to be able to get more things that were already cooked. This was on a nice cool Friday night, and they were all sitting around Blackie's fire, eating peanuts while some potatoes were roasting in the ashes. They hadn't thought much about Sunday dinner, and hadn't fixed a thing for it.

"Well," said Jocko, "I wish some folks around here would keep more cooked things out where we could get them. Those turnovers that Mrs. Mas made for us have about spoiled my appetite for our own cooking. I wonder if Jay Bird doesn't know who is cooking our Sunday dinner."

Jay Bird was dozing over in the corner on his stool, but he heard Jocko, and he spoke up.

Said Jay Bird: "I can tell you who is going to cook a good dinner, but I can't tell you how to get it, for there is a mighty big dog behind it.

"Aunt Lindy has been salting down some fresh meat in her smoke house, and I heard her tell Tom today that, now that he had plenty of fresh meat, she was going to boil the last big old ham that she had and have it for Sunday dinner. She brought it out and scraped a lot of pepper off of it and washed it up nice and clean, and she said she was going to boil it while she was cooking dinner Saturday, and would put it in her spring house to keep cool till Sunday. Uncle Joe and Aunt Judy are coming over to help her eat it, and I think they expect to have a big day.

"But you know Hound Dog is over there, and Aunt Lindy expects him to keep bears and other things away from her things. If he lets somebody get that ham, there's no telling what she would do to him."

Blackie blew a few smoke rings and looked dreamy.

Then he said: "Well, let me sleep on that. I am not going to get Hound Dog into any trouble, for he is my friend and belongs to the family, and it's my business to keep him out of trouble; but we have to have that ham. There are no two ways about that. Aunt Lindy has been eating old ham till she is tired of them, and now she has plenty of fresh meat. Blackie Bear and his friends have been eating fresh meat all the year, till they are tired of that, and they want some old ham. Why not let everybody have what they want when it so easy to? I think, maybe, I can work it out about the dog so he won't get into any trouble." And Blackie took a few more lazy puffs at his pipe, and then knocked the ashes out and went to bed.

The Struggle of Suits.

Did you ever stop to think that hidden beneath the drab mechanics of the play of a bridge hand a bitter, relentless battle is constantly raging? Both sides hold high cards, Aces and Kings, which offer some chance of winning tricks; and long suits whose low cards may eventually become established as trick winners. Both sides are trying to mobilize their available honor and length forces in order to break through the barrier of the opposing stoppers and trumps. It is a true Struggle of Suits—a battle of sequence against sequence, length against length, honor against honor.

When Declarar's trump suit bars the way of his adversaries' strong cards, sprawling across the combined hands like a fortress, the Struggle of Suits assumes the character of a siege—the trump fortress must be attacked by forcing leads so that it may eventually be undermined and Declarer will have no trumps left to stop the attack of the opponents' suit. To combat this the Declarer must plan his plays with clock-like precision, so that he will retain sufficient trumps to act as a barrier against the onslaught of the enemy's suit.

Notice in the hand below how important length in trumps can be to either side, but with what caution the power of the trump suit must be preserved.

West, Dealer
East and West vulnerable

	♠ J 9 7 ♡ J 5 3 ◇ 7 4 2 ♣ A 6 3 2
♠ 6 ♡ A K Q 9 8 ◇ A 6 ♣ K Q J 10 9	N W E S	♠ 10 5 4 2 ♡ 7 6 4 2 ◇ 8 5 3 ♣ 7 4
	♠ A K Q 8 3 ♡ 10 ◇ K Q J 10 9 ♣ 8 5

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1♡	Pass	Pass	1♠
3♣	Pass	3♡	4◇
4♡	Pass	Pass	4♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

South wins the final contract in four spades because the gods have willed him the great advantage of rank in suits—his four-spade contract will overcall West's lower-ranking heart suit.

West opens the heart King, winning the first trick. He continues with the heart Queen, fighting at once to remove from South's hand the all important trumps, which prevent his high hearts from winning tricks. But South must also recognize the danger to him if he allows one of his trumps to slip from his grasp, for he would then, after drawing four rounds of trumps, be forced to give West the lead with the diamond Ace and West could cash his remaining hearts, unobstructed by trump stoppers. So South allows the heart Queen to win, discarding a club. Now West continues hearts, and this time South ruffs and immediately leads diamonds, conceding a trick to the Ace. West wins the Ace and is powerless to force South again. If he leads a fourth heart, North, by this time having none of that suit left, can use one of his small trumps to win the trick, and South will still hold the four spades necessary to exhaust East's supply and escape the danger of having one of his now established diamond tricks ruffed. By properly refusing to waste a valuable trump South has maintained the full strength of his trump fortress and has won this battle of suits.

The same power which possession of trump length gave to South at the four-spade contract, West would have had if he had been permitted to hold the bid at four hearts. South's solid spade suit, which as trumps not only gave him five tricks but enabled him to withstand the attack of West's hearts, would have been powerless had hearts been trumps. After the King of spades had taken the first trick, West could have prevented his opponents from winning any more tricks in their established suit by stopping them with his small hearts; and since only three leads would have been necessary to exhaust the opposing hearts, no such careful husbanding of trump length would have been necessary on West's part. He would simply have trumped the second spade, played out his Ace, King and Queen of hearts, and then led clubs until North took his Ace. A subsequent spade lead could have been securely halted by the use of the remaining heart in West's hand, and, in fact, unless North and South had led diamonds after the first trick, West could have made five hearts by discarding East's losing diamonds on the established clubs. But being vulnerable, West did not take a chance in the bidding by going to five hearts all alone, and East certainly could not help him with almost a Yarborough (a hand containing no honor).

White Satin Collars Add Bright Touch

Have High Neck Line and Tailored Furbelows; Flat Bows Popular.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

THE white satin collar has never been eulogized to the extent it deserves. This season, more than any other, it should be loudly lauded.

Collars of sleek white satin in which have already put in an appearance in a local shop are conspicuous for two things, a high neck line, and tailored furbelows. Scarcely one that doesn't fasten much higher and closer than ordinary. And all of them have flat bows, or jabots, or cut-out places.

Such collars are exceptionally flattering. There might have been a time when a woman said, "I can't wear white close to my face, it makes my skin seem too sallow!" But with beauticians crying out against sallow skins, and offering preparations to bleach it, and with make-up varying for all types, there is no reason why every woman can't wear a white collar and look well in it!

A white collar on a dress does things! It gives a definite chic! It gives a bright touch. The shiny silkiness of satin lightens the face.

Do have a white satin collar! And do see those in an F street store. They are only $1.

• • • •

Lightweight, Filmy Panties.

All shoppers who miss this opportunity will be sorry! A large downtown store is having a sale of panties—two pair for $1. And such panties! They are made from a filmy, gossamer material that has scarcely any weight at all, but an unbelievable sturdiness.

One customer bought two pair a few days ago. When she got home and examined them closely she realized what exceptional values they are and ordered 12 more pair!

These panties are available in white and tearose.

Good Copies of Etchings.

Etchings have more interest for those who see them than those who read about them. But in this instance there are etchings which should interest solely in regard to comparative prices.

The originals are selling in certain shops for as much as $35 and $75. But in this F street store are copies—and very good copies, too—in most attractive gold and ivory frames. Etchings with frames cost only 65 cents apiece, or a pair for $1.25.

Adaptable Vanity.

This vanity purse might almost have been designed as a memorial to vanity. The outside is covered with large clear mirrors. On the inside is a downy puff.

It is a "vanity" any young miss can carry conveniently in her hand while she dances, a purse its owner may well be proud to flash in the eyes of admirers. Perhaps its chief charm is the fact its mirror back and front adapt it to frocks of any color, from pastels to midnight blacks and blues.

• • • •

Basket-Style Trays.

A Connecticut avenue store has some exceptional trays. They're made of a light metal in basket style—boasting archlike handles across the middle. They are printed over to look as though a coarse linen napkin had been spread on the bottom. The print is so realistic that one can actually see the criss-cross threads and the fringe along the sides.

The trays are $1.25.

• • • •

Double-Life Furniture.

A downtown store has an attractive piece of furniture which is causing a lot of talk—because it leads a double life!

It's a chaise longue by day, and a twin divan by night. It's commonly referred to as a chaisette. Some people say "It's a studio couch—only it's different!"

And therein lies the tale. It's different all right. A studio couch is obviously what it is. It may be parked close to the wall and hidden under large pillows, and hemmed in between tables, but it's still a studio couch and nobody will mistake it for anything else.

But the chaisette has all the qualities of a studio couch, chaise longue, twin beds and divan.

All those who have followed the evolution of a studio couch will remember the replacement of the old folding davenport by the one person studio couch, which gradually involved into an intricate thing with an underneath space for blankets. Next the studio couch that opened out into two couches—and finally this chaisette which combines the qualities of everything but the kitchen stove and sink.

Illuminated Fish Bowl.

One day a customer came into a local shop and ordered a large illuminated goldfish bowl. The top and bottom are beaten copper, and the glass a greenish gold. Time went on, the person who ordered it never called for it. So there it is. It might be the very cradle you want for your guppies!

Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

William Sprague—Kate Chase

SELDOM IN POLITICAL history has there been a closer bond between father and daughter than that which existed between the brilliant jurist, Salmon P. Chase, and his equally gifted and beautiful daughter, Kate. Perhaps the failure of her picturesque romance with William Sprague, Rhode's Island's Governor and later its Representative to the United States, was due in part to her exalted conception of her father as all that man should be.

Combination of Sunshine and Shadow Seen in Kate Chase's Life.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

NO WOMAN held a higher place in the history of the social and political happenings of the nineteenth century than Kate Chase, the vivacious daughter of Justice Salmon P. Chase, at one time Lincoln's brilliant Secretary of the Treasury and later Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

Her life was a landscape of sunshine and shadow more than is true of most mortals. When she died at Edgewood, on the outskirts of Washington, as she lay in her father's library, a queen even in death, beautiful in old age as in youth, men whispered to themselves that warning of the ancients: "Sic transit gloria mundi" (thus passes the glory of the world).

Seldom in political history has there been a closer bond than that which existed between her and her distinguished father. It was of the type that was demonstrated again in the abiding affection and comradeship between the late Champ Clark and his daughter Genevieve, remarked by all who had the privilege of witnessing this bond.

Perhaps the failure of the romance of her heart was due in part to the worship she paid to her father. Few men can bear playing second fiddle to their father-in-law and William Sprague was no exception to the general rule.

Outshone Husband.

In many of this series of "Half-Forgotten Romances of American History" the man's career has been outstanding rather than that of the woman. This was not entirely true in the romance between William Sprague and Kate Chase. Her name had a power amounting almost to enchantment, and she always outshone the rather mediocre fortunes of her nevertheless talented and handsome lover and husband. Therein is another guiding post to the causes of the collapse in their romance.

It was Justice Chase's second wife, Eliza Ann Smith, who bore him his daughter, named by the mother for her predecessor, Katherine Garniss, who had been her close and intimate friend. From the moment of her birth she was her father's idol, and he wrote in his diary of his emotions upon first seeing her:

"I went apart and, kneeling down, prayed God to support and comfort my dear wife, to preserve the life of the child and save both from sin. I endeavored to give up the child and all into His hands. After a time I went into the room. After I had seen my wife and child, I went into the library and read a few pages in Eber's book on children, a judicious treaty. At last I became tired and, though it was now day, lay down and slept a while. The babe is pronounced pretty. I think it quite otherwise. It is, however, well formed, and I am thankful. May God give the child a good understanding, that she may know and keep His commandments."

Studied Law.

Justice Chase brought up Kate on a strict diet of the Scriptures and other good literature. As she grew older he encouraged her in the study of the law until she became of a considerable aid to him in the preparation and decision of cases. She had inherited from him a considerable legal talent and he often said of her that had she been a man she could have been a great lawyer. In that day, women lawyers and jurists were unheard of, so he regarded her gift merely as another delightful way in which to aid him.

Kate's mother died when the child was quite young. After two years of faithful mourning the young lawyer brought a stepmother in his home, a Miss Sarah Ludlow, of Cincinnati, descendant of one of the founders of that city.

Kate and the new "mother" proved congenial at once. But she only lived nine years after her marriage and Salmon Chase was again a widower. Kate, then less than 15 years of age, took her place at the head of his home.

When he was elected Governor of Ohio and they went to Columbus to live all marveled at the poise and grace of the young hostess of the gubernatorial mansion. Meantime she was studying the languages, music and the other fine arts. Her voice was music itself and the magic of its tones were remembered for long years afterward by those fortunate enough to have heard it.

At G. O. P. Convention.

She was with her father at the famous Republican convention in Chicago when Chase was a candidate, but the choice finally fell upon Abraham Lincoln, who recognized the genius of his erstwhile rival by appointing him Secretary of the Treasury.

Up to the time when the Chases came to Washington, romance had passed by Kate Chase. But it was, as ever, just around the corner. In September, 1860, she accompanied her father to the unveiling of Commodore Perry's statue at Cleveland.

Couple Fell in Love at First Sight, But Discord Ended Marriage.

Many States had sent delegations to honor the naval hero and Kate Chase in the governor's box was a picture to behold with her wide hazel eyes, auburn hair and marvelous white skin, a full, low broad brow, mobile lips, a small, round chin and a piquant, slightly uptilted nose.

All eyes were on her, but she saw leading Rhode Island's delegation its young Governor, William Sprague, an Adonis on horseback. He threw up his hand in salute as he rode past the Governor's box and Kate looked into his black eyes and romance had found her at last. It was a case of love for both at first sight.

They met and the verdict of their eyes was confirmed. Sprague went back to Rhode Island, but the outbreak of the Civil War brought him to Washington at the head of a regiment he had raised and equipped at his own expense. At Bull Run he displayed high valor. Again he met Kate Chase and with the quick bloom of romance in war they became engaged.

Married in Washington.

Their marriage in Washington on November 12, 1863, was on a pre-war scale of brilliancy. A special wedding march was composed and played by the United States Marine Band at the ceremony. She went back to Rhode Island with her soldier-Governor husband, and so popular were they that it was with ease that he was sent by the State to represent it in the United States Senate, of which he was then the youngest member.

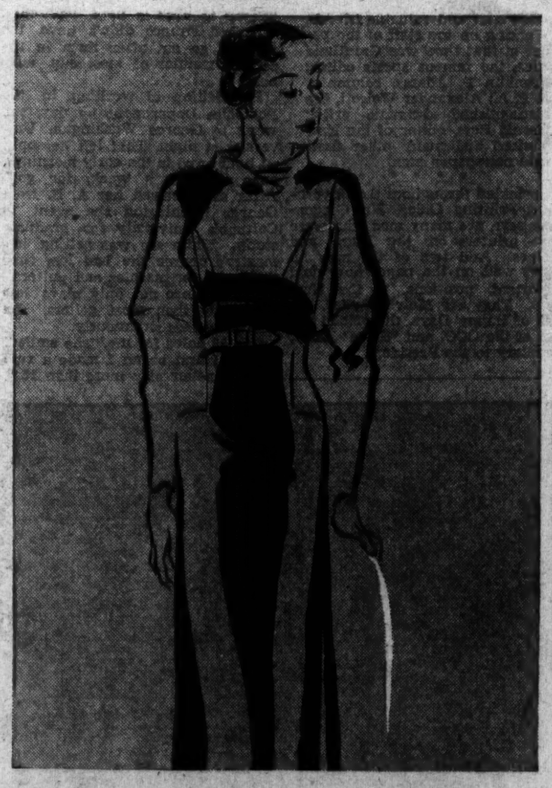
Their home was the fashionable center of the Capital. A son was born to them and his birth was a matter of National interest.

Meantime Secretary Chase had become Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court. In May, 1873, he died in New York and his body was sent back to Washington, where it lay in state for three days and then was buried in Oak Hill Cemetery.

It was nearly all shadow for Kate Sprague after her beloved father's death. Sprague's magnificent fortune was almost swept away by the panic of the early seventies and with comparative poverty came wretchedness and misunderstanding with Sprague. For a time they lived together unhappily. Then Mrs. Sprague appealed to the courts for relief and divorce was given to her with permission to resume her maiden name. After a time Sprague remarried and then Mrs. Sprague became "Kate Chase" again.

Kate Chase lived at Edgewood until July 31, 1899, when she died, her three daughters by her side. From the windows of her home one could have seen the beautiful Capital below, where she had reigned almost as sovereign in the halls of the light-hearted and the gay and had been the toast of the town.

Simple, Natural Silhouette Seen in Dresses for Fall



By Amos Parrish.

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—Step up to this picture and say "How do you do" to your new self. For there you are, outlined as fashion wants you to be outlined this fall.

If you'll get out one of your last fall's dresses and compare it with this . . . or any of the smart new dresses . . . you'll quickly see the difference between last fall's tricky wide shoulders and the simple, natural ones of this fall.

And between the small, snug waistline of last year and the still small but looser waistline of this year.

And when you compare the lengths of the two skirts you'll find this fall's just a bit shorter than the one you wore last autumn.

Shoulders and hips are almost the same width. The waistline is normal and even a little larger or looser than it was in the spring.

You'll find that all this is true, not only of your daytime dresses but of your evening costumes, too. And of those new cocktail fashions for very formal afternoon wear.

Starting with sports and continuing through evening, there are five smart skirt lengths. And so you may see exactly where your new skirts should be hung, we've prepared an illustrated leaflet which shows you. If you'd like it, just send us the filled-in coupon and requested enclosure.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutler.

Tuberculosis and Sunlight.

Some weeks ago mention was made in this column of the danger of using sun baths in the so-called exudative type of tuberculosis. In support of the position taken in the article referred to A. Hope Gosse and G. S. Irwin, two English tuberculosis experts, have recently published in the British Medical Journal a series of case reports.

It appears that toward the end of the very hot season of 1933 many cases of recently developed pulmonary tuberculosis applied for admission to the Brompton Hospital. Several were heavily tanned from sun bathing. Because of the possible relation between sun bathing and the development of tuberculosis these authors decided to make a clinical study. Investigation showed that in 11 cases acute symptoms followed the rather intensive use of sun baths. The pronounced tan of these patients was proof of considerable sun exposure.

Among those who should use special care not to overexpose the body to sunlight, Gosse and Irwin include persons who have lost weight, who feel abnormally tired, who are feverish, or who have had at any previous date symptoms of lung disorder.

As with other valuable remedial measures, sun bathing may be overdone. With many it has become a fad and unless precautions are taken during these sunny days, not only may the sun bather arouse a sleeping and practically cured tuberculosis, but damage to other organs may follow.

POTOMAC PARK

By CAROLYN COX

Wanda Mallory, coming to Washington penniless and friendless, finds a job in a Government office, and friends among her coworkers. She shares an apartment with another girl, Kentucky Queen, and the only fly in the ointment of her happiness lies in the fact that there is a mystery she can not penetrate concerning David Randall, whom she loves.

CHRISTMAS at Camotop Courts was jolly enough, but not conspicuously so. They agreed not to exchange presents. Priscilla sighed relievedly, and said that it was so much more sophisticated than the usual childish way of spending Christmas.

The weather was mild, almost like spring. Federal employes were given Saturday morning "in recognition of faithful overtime," which made a three-day holiday. Wanda and David spent most of it outdoors, rambling, or trying their hands at archery in Potomac Park, or exploring the woods of Rock Creek.

Kentucky's complacency had an aura of brightness these days, which was apparent to Wanda, who speculated much and guessed the reason before Kentucky said with betraying indifference: "Zeke Tolliver is coming to dinner tonight, Wanda. Would you like to invite Mr. Randall, too?"

"Who is Mr. Tolliver?"

"Zeke? Oh, he's just a fellow I grew up with. Coming back for the opening of Congress. He's one of the Representatives, you know."

Oh, so carelessly.

Wanda's intuition bounded across veracity in one gracious leap. Without a blink of an eyelash, she told a beautiful fib in a voice that dripped regret.

"I'm so sorry, Kentucky! I know he'd love to meet Mr. Tolliver, but this happens to be the evening we'd planned to have dinner at the Willard and go to the oratorio afterwards. 'The Messiah,' you know. He has the tickets already. I'm so sorry."

"Well, that's all right. Zeke will be coming again, and then we'll make arrangements far enough ahead to be convenient for everybody."

Wanda patted herself on the back, having caught the gleam of anticipation in her friend's eye—an evening alone with Ezekiel! Now, the next thing was to get herself invited to dinner, or else she must eat in a cafeterian alone and go to the moving picture afterward. Which, such being the trick of fate, was exactly what she did.

Surprise Visit.

Randall never broke an engagement, but it so happened that he had not made one for that evening, having hurried from the office on an errand, and as Wanda did not see him, she had no opportunity to hint that his company at dinner would be agreeable.

Moreover, it was another shabby trick of fate to have Randall call for her about 8 o'clock, to express surprise that she was not there, and, after an introduction to the Representative and a politely brief chat, to go to the oratorio in the hope of meeting her.

When Wanda, tired and sleepy, reached home about 11 o'clock, Mr. Tolliver had gone and Kentucky was in bed.

"Have a nice time?" Kentucky queried in the darkness.

"Lovely! Did you?"

"Very nice." Carelessly: "Zeke liked Mr. Randall very much."

"What?"

Kentucky chuckled. "You little devil!" she said, but her voice was tremulous with affection.

Parking Was Problem.

"Just my luck!" thought Wanda. Never told a little white lie in my life that I didn't get caught in it. Don't think St. Peter chalked this one up against me though. I could hear the happiness in Kentucky's voice. Wonder if this Zeke is good enough for her. He isn't. No man is—except David, and she can't have him.

She went with David to see the President light the Community Christmas Tree, and trampled the mud of Sherman Square, which was being worked over for a parking place for automobiles of Federal employes.

Parking space and starlings seemed to be the leading municipal problems. It was said that the Government workers drove down at daylight and brought their breakfast coffee in thermos bottles in order to park within walking distance of their respective offices.

December, mild as May, grew crabbed with age, and died in a raging shiver, pulling sheets of ice over its grisly head as it expired, and relaxed on the last day.

Pool Was Frozen.

For the first time that winter the reflecting pool in Lincoln Memorial froze tight. Sunday, the last day of the old year, the floor of the earth swarming with skaters and the ceiling was blue and clear.

"Kentucky," called Royce, breezing in with frost on his breath and fires of hope in his breast, "I'm going to call Zephyr up and ask her to bring her nephews down to skate on the pool. The kids will be crazy about it."

"Why, that will be fun, Royce. Let me know what she says."

He telephoned from his own apartment, and reported later that Junior had been croupy all night, and that Norman had twisted his ankle in a race on his Christmas scooter, but their aunt was free of limb, unafflicted with rheumatism or bronchial plague, and if he would be content with only one-third of his invitation accepted, she would be glad to come.

Visitors Expected.

"Coming over, Wanda?"

"Later. David will be up pretty soon."

"You're coming, aren't you, Kentucky?"

"Not this time. Zeke is going to drop in this morning. He doesn't skate. Listen, Royce, why don't you bring Zephyr over here for waffles and bacon or something? Nick and Priscilla can come, too. Make a party of it."

"Bully! Send the old year out with a kick. How can you—only one iron?"

"I'll tell you what: I can keep one waffle iron going for the delicate palates, and make buckwheat cakes for the others. I have two big griddles. And that pail of country sausage you brought me and Vermont maple syrup. Honey. I have plenty of butter and cream. Got a large can of your favorite coffee yesterday. I'll find something to finish off with—oh, I know. I've been saving that jar of spiced peaches you got from the old woman on the farm."

Farm Products Shared.

Royce was not more generous than Nick, but he was more thoughtful. Government employes who lived in rural Maryland or Virginia sometimes offered to share with their fellow-workers farm products at a bargain. On such occasions Royce's gratitude for Kentucky's impromptu suppers took material form. He brought her cream, honey in the comb, apple butter, fresh cider, sauerkraut, marmalade, and home-made mincemeat. His latest offering was a bucket of country sausage, seasoned with sage, as his mother used to make it.

"I'm afraid it will be an imposition, Kaintuck," he protested lamely.

"Nonsense! There'll be enough for hungry skaters."

"Oh, boy! It'll be a feast. Need anything before I go?"

"No, no." She was looking about her, planning in her easy, capable way. "We'll be a little crowded—only four can sit in the dinette—we'll all eat in here—two at that table over there—We'll manage somehow. Zephyr won't mind if we're crowded."

"Best sport in the world. She'll get a big kick out of it."

Wanda smiled at his pride. Poor dear! When one is in love——

A Gracious Hostess.

She helped Kentucky with the preparations. Indeed, she always helped, and always ended by feeling that she was only "Mother's little helper," aiding more by her willing spirit than what she actually accomplished.

Kentucky never hurried. A careless observer would have called her slow, noticing her deliberate movements and that she often stood motionless, doing nothing, it seemed, but really planning her work for maximum achievement with minimum effort. It was the secret of her gracious hospitality.

"No trouble at all," she would drawl comfortably and convincingly. Her circle of friends was limited, but intimate and devoted. The simplicity of her sociability was a fine art. She liked to have people about her, and their pleasure was the core of her contentment.

She was standing by the sink now, planning. She looked up, surprised at the impish expression on the face of Wanda, who was holding something behind her.

Congratulations in Order.

Wanda began to sing—if it could be called singing—she couldn't carry a tune: "Happy birthday to you, happy birthday——"

Kentucky's eyes widened. "Why, I believe it is my birthday. How in the world did you know?"

"I've known for a long, long time," Wanda replied, mysteriously, and flashed her present. "How do you like yourself?"

Kentucky's astonishment and pleasure were touching. "Where did you get it?"

"Made it."

"You never did."

"Did so."

"When? How?"

"Peeked through the chink in the bedroom door at you as you sat by the window."

"I didn't know you could draw, Wanda."

"I can't—much. This isn't bad, though; is it?"

"It's lovely. I mean the work is."

She gazed at it rapturously, at an idealized Kentucky in pastels—serene, strong, almost beautiful. Through the window was the Lincoln Memorial, the subject of her contemplation.

"Wanda, you precious child," she said again and again. "I love it. To think that you went to all that trouble for me! You—precious child I'm—I'm almost—pretty."

CAPITAL KITCHEN

By Susan Mills.

WHEN it is still too hot for juicy steaks, or the family is too small to successfully consume a large roast, fall back on poultry.

Two recipes below might suggest a new dish, and a new menu. Both are valuable these days.

Chicken Merango.

1 young chicken.
¾ cup butter.
1 finely chopped onion.
1 small carrot, cut in cubes.
1 turnip, cut in cubes.
1 cup canned tomatoes.
1 teaspoon sugar.
Salt and pepper.

Cut up a young chicken in quarters. Sprinkle with salt and pepper, dredge with flour and brown in salt pork fat. Put in a baking dish with the other ingredients and cook slowly in the oven until the chicken is tender. Serve in the dish in which it was cooked.

Mexican Chicken.

4 to 6 pound fowl
4 or 5 potatoes
1 cup seedless raisins
3 cups canned tomatoes
Butter
1 tablespoon sugar
2 tablespoons chopped onion
2 tablespoons parsley
Flour
Salt and pepper

Simmer the fowl in a small quantity of salted water until tender. Remove from the broth. Set the fowl aside for stuffing. To the chicken broth add the canned tomatoes, sugar and the finely chopped mild onion. Let this sauce cook down.

In the meantime prepare the stuffing by cooking and mashing the potatoes and adding to them the raisins and enough milk to make the mixture the stiffness of ordinary mashed potatoes. Stuff this, while still hot, into the body cavity and neck of the fowl. Crowd in all the stuffing possible. Pour a little melted butter over the chicken. Put it in the oven to brown. Thicken the tomato sauce to the consistency of gravy and add 2 or 3 tablespoons of finely chopped parsley and green pepper, if desired.

When the chicken and the surface of the potato stuffing have become delicately brown, place on a large hot platter. Pour part of the sauce around the chicken and serve at once.

Mrs. Genevieve Herrick Will Be Guest Speaker

Mrs. Genevieve Forbes Herrick, president of the Woman's National Press Club, will be guest speaker at a dinner for the Tuesday Evening Group at 7 o'clock tomorrow night at the Columbia Country Club.

Her subject will be "Washington Women." She will be introduced by Miss Alice Hutchins Drake, director of the group, which has met regularly at the Y. W. C. A. this summer.

What Today Means

"Leo."

If August 13 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:30 to 11:30 a. m., from 2:30 to 4:30 p. m. and from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 6:30 to 8:30 a. m., from 4:30 to 6:30 p. m. and from 9:30 to 11:30 p. m.

If on this date you find yourself in danger of becoming the possessor of a first-class grouchy disposition, you will display good judgment if you turn a mental flip-flop, so the sunny side of your nature will be apparent to all who come into contact with you. Smiles may accomplish much more than frowns. Business in certain lines may prove fairly satisfactory, but there will be very little done in the way of accomplishment to cause excitement. Be careful not to indulge in procrastination, for you may find you have sown only seeds of dissatisfaction, which might result in a healthy crop of trouble. Social amenities of life should receive careful observance on this August 13, for a laxity of them might cause your losing a friend. Married, engaged couples, and sweethearts may find this day conducive to misunderstandings unless they exercise caution. Avoid disputes or indulging in petty actions.

If a woman and August 13 is your natal day, contrary to superstitions, it should prove a lucky one for you. Money matters may soon be adjusted to your complete satisfaction. Preliminary details of some work or movement, which you may be asked to undertake, might have unexpected gratifying results, so it is advisable to graciously agree to undertake the task, if requested. Love will find a way to gratify your heart's desire, and through it happiness will come in abundance. Your success in matrimonial life may depend entirely upon your own willingness to play that game on a 50-50 basis. You must be willing to give your husband the same consideration and display of affection that you expect from him.

The child born on August 13, as it grows up, will prove easily satisfied. Possessing a very appreciative nature, it should prove a gratifying pleasure to do things for this youngster. Mentally bright and physically alert, this child will hold its own in school work as well as social activities.

If a man and August 13 is your birth anniversary, you possibly possess such an easygoing nature, that you are able to meet many trying situations with a cheerfulness and calmness that smooths a way to a satisfactory solution of them. You probably are best adapted for a professional career. The pulpit, engineering, journalism, and art have proven profitable fields of endeavor for men born on this date.

Japanese Woman Leader Organizes "35 League" for Those Wishing to Stay Young

Nippon Idea However Is Not Native

Fair Sex in the Orient Does Not Dread Growing Old.

Treated With Greater Respect as Years Are Added.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

JAPANESE women at the age of 35 will stop having birthdays.

They will, that is, if the "35 League," recently organized in Tokyo, continues to draw attention—and members.

With the motto "You are as old as you think," the society, under the leadership of Madam Chieko Yamano, includes in its membership any woman agreeing to remain "35" for ever, despite her actual age.

In America, where the average woman is greatly concerned with trying to keep young, such a club might not be unusual. But in a country where respect for age is traditionally a part of every person's training, it seems somewhat out of keeping with the proverbial ideas and ideals of Japanese women.

Gets More Respect.

"For the average woman in Japan thinks less about how old she is than almost anything," said Miss Shio Sakanish, of the Department of Orientalia of the Library of Congress. "She doesn't dread to grow old. The older she is, in fact, the more consideration and respect she receives."

Then how did she suppose the "35 League" came to be organized?

"Well, Madam Yamano, the organizer, had lived in New York a number of years," she began.

She went on to explain Madam Yamano was a hairdresser who established a luxurious beauty shop, the first of its kind, in Tokyo. Abandoning that business after the earthquake of 1923, she had, since that time, been a leader in a number of movements.

Did Miss Sakanish believe Madam Yamano's latest project, the "35 League," would ever gain a foothold in Japan?

"No, I don't think so," she replied. "The idea behind it is not bad, but I don't believe it will arouse great interest among Japanese women."

This opinion was borne out by Miss Terue Otsuki, of Okayama, Japan, a graduate student of Columbia University and now in Washington to do research on the life and work of Susan B. Anthony.

"The average Japanese woman is too busy with more important things to worry about than trying to keep young," she said. "Furthermore, she is usually too tied down with domestic cares to think much about either her appearance or her age.

Not Annoyed by Age.

"After she marries she is not supposed to look so young and so carefree as her single sisters. She settles down to a quiet existence and concerns herself, for the most part, with her household. She accepts the years as they come, doesn't worry about them, and isn't annoyed if one asks her how many she has accumulated."

Nevertheless the "35 League" will make some progress in Japan, Miss Otsuki believes.

"As the pioneer native beauty shop owner in Japan," she said, "Mme. Yamano, its founder, probably has a wide acquaintanceship with women who are interested in retaining a youthful face as well as a youthful point of view. But I don't think any great number of Japanese women will be interested enough to join the '35 League.'"

But what about such a league for women of other countries? Is it reasonable to suppose the average woman can peel away the years and retrieve the outlook of a woman of 35 merely by concentrating on the desire to do so?

Mrs. Victoria Faber Steveson, national president of the League of American Pen Women, was doubtful.

"I'm afraid that is too much to expect of the average woman," she said. "Up to the age of 70 it might be possible, but after that time infirmities would probably outweigh the desire to stay '35.'

"I believe, of course, almost any woman can stay younger, mentally, if she determines to do so."

What of the age selected? Did she think 35 was ideal?

Age 35 Held Ideal.

"It's a very good age," she said. "A woman of 35 has both the stability of maturity and the energy and enthusiasm of youth. Considering that a woman's outlook is so important to her happiness, it would be remarkable if all of us could stay '35' forever. Remarkable, but I'm afraid impossible."

Mrs. Minnie L. Briggs, artist and vice president of the Society of Washington Etchers, agreed the age selected was ideal.

"Almost any woman would be happier," she said, "if she believed she could retain the outlook of a woman of 35. I think this would be possible if women would stop worrying or thinking about getting old. 'You are as old as you think' is, I believe, a very good motto for all of us."

Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, president of the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs, thinks the best way to stay young is to get interested in something else.

"Women who keep their youth are those who forget about age and let it take care of itself," she said. "Naturally, I believe almost any woman—middle-aged and otherwise—can find something to interest her in club work. But joining a league bent on staying young seems futile to me. Youth can't be captured by group concentration."

"YOU ARE AS OLD as you think," say members of the "35 League." Led by Mme. Chieko Yamano, seated third from left, these Japanese women have agreed to defy Father Time and remain "35" forever.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

World Demands We Deal With Reality, as Well as Dreams, in Love.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Your cynical idea of a man's love as portrayed by your advice to "Betty" in Thursday's Post called forth a challenge that I found impossible to ignore.

You have indeed made love one of the every-day vulgarities of human existence; something to forget or easily transfer.

Miss Haworth, is not one beautiful dream of "what might have been" a source of far greater joy than a thousand physical crudities? Thoughtfully yours "KLE."

Facts Must Be Faced.

DEAR "KLE": Nothing could have been farther from my thoughts than a desire to preach cynicism with regard to a man's capacity for love when I answered "Betty's" letter on August 9. My remarks applied to her specific case, and were not to be interpreted as generalities.

• • • •

Would you, or any young man with a heart instead of a stone in his breast, ask that a girl continue to burn incense to his image when he has registered indifference to her love by a silence more eloquent than words? You recall she said that her young man—whom she knew liked her, but of whose love she had no reassurance whatever—had failed to answer several letters she had written him.

Does a man ignore a girl's love letters when he cares about her? And what does it profit a girl to dedicate her heart to a cause lost from the beginning?

• • • •

Experience teaches two truths about that manifestation of spirit and personality which we call love. One is that it flowers involuntarily and can not be coerced. Hence, the young man is not to be blamed if he can not love the girl. The other is that time heals all emotional hurts, and love rises again and again from its own ashes, like the legendary Phoenix.

• • • •

Beautiful dreams are necessary, in moderation, for sustaining and nourishing the soul, but this practical world demands that we deal with reality as well. And reality for "Betty" means that her life must go on, as full as she can make it, without this particular young man. Let her dream not of this one she can not have, but of one to come who dreams likewise of her. M. H.

Beginning tomorrow, Miss Haworth's column will be discontinued for a fortnight while she is on vacation. It will be resumed Tuesday, August 28.

Book Built to Amuse, Young Author Says

Virginia Faulkner, 21, Explains "Friends and Romans" Makes No Effort Toward Reality; Is Working on New Novel.

NEW YORK, Aug 12 (AP).—Virginia Faulkner, 21-year-old Nebraska girl whose sophisticated novel "Friends and Romans" was published recently, says it isn't necessary for people to Live (with a capital L) before attempting to write.

"It's just an excuse when one wants to leave home unsupervised," she contends.

As for her novel, "it was built to amuse, does not expose any new philosophies, contribute any truths or make any effort toward reality in situation, dialog or character."

Miss Faulkner, who left her home town of Lincoln, Nebr., for an apartment off Park avenue this summer, is quite thrilled at seeing her brainchild on the book counters.

Born in Lincoln.

She was born in Lincoln, spent two years in the University of Nebraska, a year at the Moxley School in Rome and a year at Radcliffe in Cambridge.

"I wrote 'Friends and Romans,'" she explains, "because I am nuts about Italy. Also, I always thought I'd write a book, and told somebody I would—and so got myself cornered."

Her novel concerns the life—love and otherwise—of an American woman pianist who tries to get away from it all at an Italian villa.

Aside from the pianist, "the characters arrived as someone was needed—except for the Italian servants, who are wish-fulfillments," she says—"and," glancing around her apartment adds—"I wish I had them right now."

Views on Nebraska.

Miss Faulkner, despite the worldliness of her novel, has little regard for those who blow satirical darts at the State of Nebraska.

"Most jibes for which Nebraska is the butt," she says solemnly, "come from dissatisfied yokelites who haven't enough brains to get out."

Just now she's busy on a new novel, her formula being "to work four or five hours per diem until finished." She strikes determined blows at a portable typewriter which is without a back-spacer.

The absence of that gadget, she insists, has no significance aside from the fact that she threw the typewriter at a friend one time.

Special Curricula Urged for Women

"Homemaking" Ranked First by Educator.

WOMEN'S colleges should have curricula designed especially for women, believes Dr. Alice E. Gipson, dean of Lindenwood College, at St. Charles, Mo.

The education of men and women is too much alike, contends Dr. Gipson. "Homemaking" should be most important in a curriculum for women, she believes. Supplementary to this should be biology, house planning, house furnishing, dietetics, child development, economics of the household, psychology of human relations and vocational training.

Other courses the dean regards as necessary to the "useful life" are "plain old history" and literature, community life, delinquency of children and civic consciousness.

Too Much Sweetness Kills Poems, Says Nathalia Crane

NEW YORK, Aug. 12 (Spl.).—Whimsical poems are scorned by Nathalia Crane, whose poem "The Janitor's Boy" caused critics to proclaim her a genius at the age of nine, and who yesterday celebrated her twenty-first birthday.

"I haven't written any whimsical poems recently," she told reporters who interviewed her on the eve of her birthday. "Too much sweetness has killed too many fine works of poetry, and I have tried to keep my work from dripping with honey." She read some of her new poems to the reporters.

Miss Crane, who has not published any of her work for four years, will release her accumulated poems for publication next June.

In 1931, an anonymous benefactor offered Miss Crane four year's tuition at Barnard College, on the condition that during that time she would refrain from publishing any of her work. She has kept that agreement during her three years at Barnard.

College, Miss Crane believes, has improved her poetry.

"I work at them more now," she said, "and I do a great deal more revising and correcting than I used to. I have destroyed more than half of my poems because they didn't quite come up to the standard that I have set for myself."

When Miss Crane asked the reporters and photographers what they would like to hear, her father, employed by a Brooklyn mortgage company, suggested that she "read 'em something real heavy."

Miss Crane first read a scathing satire on the present German situation, entitled, "There Is News of a Madhouse Religion."

She read in a high-pitched, well-modulated voice, and she enunciated each word clearly.

"Would you like to hear a sonnet on Milton?" she asked.

"You mean John Milden, who's in charge of the Detroit Zoo?" answered a photographer, who had not been paying any attention. And Miss Crane identified Milton before she began reading the poem.

PILLAR to POST

World War's Big Berthas Started Giegengack Toward Success.

THE Big Berthas of the World War heralded the rise of August E. Giegengack, the new public printer of the United States. As a sergeant of infantry, he was summoned to Paris soon after the long-range guns planted behind the German lines began dropping shells in the French capital.

• • • •

When the Big Berthas began hitting their target, the London Daily Mail was publishing the Stars and Stripes, the official newspaper of the A. E. F., in its Paris plant. As the panic grew in the city, the British newspaper decided to discontinue the Paris edition and close down the plant. But the Stars and Stripes had become too valuable an organ to be discontinued.

• • • •

Accordingly, the Army was asked to round up all soldiers with printing experience, and a batch of 200 appeared at the headquarters of the Stars and Stripes. Among them was Sergt. Augustus E. Giegengack, of Brooklyn.

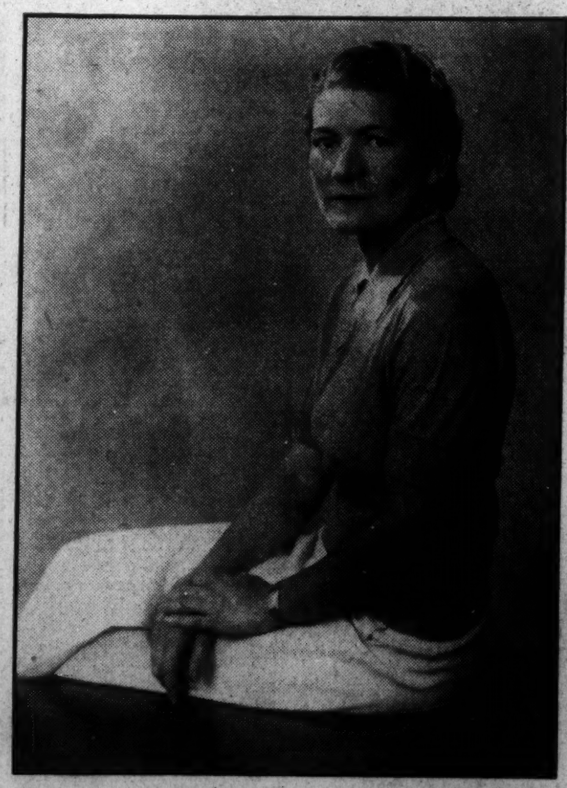
HE was put in charge of the pressroom, where he performed his work so well that he soon had charge of all the mechanical activities of the plant, including the circulation.

• • • •

His reputation for efficiency grew rapidly, and he made many new and valuable friends. Working on the staff of the paper at that time was Grantland Rice, the famous sports editor; Franklin P. Adams, columnist, F. P. A.; Alexander Wolcott, the distinguished dramatic critic; Harold Ross, editor of the New Yorker, and many other first-rate newspaper men.

• • • •

Sprinkled throughout the Government Printing Office, Mr. Giegengack says, are many men who were once printers on the Stars and Stripes. And two of the men he knew well on the paper now hold important positions in the New Deal. They are Melvin Ryder, editor of Happy Days, the official organ of the CCC, and "Steve" Early, secretary to the President.



Harris & Ewing.

A BORN ATHLETE is Winifred Faunce who, after winning several swimming titles, turned to golf. Although she has never played more than once or twice a week, she recently walked off with the District women's golf championship.

Golf Winner 'Talked Into' Tournament

Miss Winifred Faunce Had Not Practiced for Two Years.

Took Up Game Because It Was Something She Hadn't Tried.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

WHENEVER a golfer fails to smash par, he's likely to think it's because he doesn't give enough time to the game.

"Golf is like piano playing," he reasons. "Miss a couple of days' practice and you sure can tell the difference in your technique. Now if I could only go 'round the course every day I'd get somewhere. That's the way these tournament winners do."

And he adds, "Nobody ever got anywhere playing week-end golf."

This is a perfect cue for Miss Winifred Faunce to step right up and say, "Is that so?"

But being the modest, diffident person she is, Miss Faunce does nothing of the kind. Instead, she declares there is nothing remarkable about her winning tournament after tournament with only week-end practice behind her. When she carried off the District Women's Golf championship in June—most important tournament of all—she had gone for two whole years without her customary week-end playing.

Put Thrill Into Play.

Since the other players in the big tourney knew Miss Faunce had paid scant attention to golf courses in the last couple of years they didn't regard her as a formidable opponent. And she certainly did not consider herself a serious threat.

"I never would have dreamed of entering," she said yesterday, "if a group of women friends hadn't talked me into it."

Foremost in that group was Mrs. Howard Simons, chairman of the tournament committee. If Mrs. Simmons had hoped to inject more than the usual thrill and excitement into the fray, she was admirably successful.

Winifred Faunce's victory was a complete upset. Not only did she win the championship. She became the medalist as well as the champion—a rare combination. And yet she has never been anything but a week-end player.

Eight years ago she took her first whack at a golf ball. She had already made a reputation as a swimmer; was holder of the South Atlantic and District diving championships.

Tried Something New.

"But I lost interest in swimming," she said. "And I decided to take up golf. Why? Oh, I don't know. Simply because it was something I hadn't tried, I suppose."

She learned from Jack Tucker, professional at the West Potomac Club, how to handle her golf clubs. Two years after she began playing she won her first tournament, the Evening Star Trophy. Then golfing honors came to her frequently. "Came to her" is used advisedly. Winifred Faunce didn't have the time to go out after them in the serious manner of most cup winners.

In addition to working in the Postoffice Department by day, she went to George Washington University at night. That left her only an hour or so in the early mornings, once or twice a week, for golf. After she received her A. B. from George Washington she went to Columbia University for graduate study. While she was getting her master's degree she had less time than ever for mashies and putters.

Miss Faunce not only plays less frequently than most golfers, she also plays less strenuously.

"No 36 holes for me," she smiled. "When I first began I made a rule that I'd never play more than 18."

Leaves from vermillion maple trees
That splashed the sky with red.

With knightly grace the maples spread

Heavy, Exotic Perfume May Prove Stifling In Hot Weather.

Light Fragrance Gives Touch of Daintiness In Summer.

By Frances Mangum.

THERE is more than a language in perfumes. There is a decided personality, and one at variance with the seasons of the year.

In the summer a heavy, exotic perfume behaves quite contrarily. Instead of being a provocative and enticing scent it is apt to prove annoying and stifling to those who come within close range. It is particularly antagonizing to men, who during hot weather much prefer a perfume with a soft, subtle and soothing tone.

During August, when gardens and lawns wear a withered aspect, there is nothing more refreshing than a light, floral fragrance. It bespeaks daintiness and refinement, two things infinitely to be desired by all women, young and old alike.

Make Perfumes for Summer.

Manufacturers seldom fail to create summer perfumes which are not only light and soothing, but especially compounded for skins oilier in summer than winter. Such a perfume is the ideal complement for sheer, summer frocks.

By far the most popular perfumes this season have been those with floral odors. A blended bouquet scent in small pocket-size bottles delighted many flower lovers this spring, and has continued to do so all summer.

A gardenia fragrance is an all-time favorite. Be careful, though, in choosing one for the warm weather, as they range from light to heavy, and it is only the light that suits the summer. The same company that promoted the floral perfume last spring has also a gardenia perfume which actually duplicates the real gardenia fragrance and is therefore as pleasing in January as in August.

Perfume in Sticks.

Another company has recently come to the fore with a perfume stick in two odors, one a light, dainty bouquet fragrance, the other heavier and spicily Oriental.

There are two things to remember in applying perfumes. First of all, do not superimpose one scent on another. Second, "use sparingly."

The wise woman will choose her cosmetics with only a faint fragrance or none at all, rather than risk combining scents and thereby detracting one from the other. She will also use an atomizer instead of a dropper. In this way the scent is better spread and less apt to be heavily (and unpleasantly) concentrated.

League Secretary Goes on Vacation

MISS CONSTANCE ROACH, secretary of organization for the National League of Women Voters, has left for a month's vacation at her summer home, Brook Lodge, Stinson Lake, New Hampshire.

Before her return to the league's National headquarters here, Miss Roach will make an organization tour to the West Coast. She will visit the States of Washington, Oregon, California, Utah, Colorado, Oklahoma, Missouri, Kansas and Michigan, and she will be back in the Capitol about November 15.

Another league secretary, Miss Edith Rockwood, is back at her desk in National headquarters after a vacation in the Midwest. She visited her father, Judge C. J. Rockwood, in Minneapolis. Miss Rockwood is secretary of the department of Government and economic welfare and Government and child welfare.

"Four Bottles Helped Me"

Feels Fine . . . Never Tired

"My four children were born close together. I lived on a farm with lots of work to do and I got all rundown so I could hardly go. Four bottles of your Vegetable Compound helped me wonderfully. Twice since then I had to take several bottles to regulate and strengthen me. I take care of my house and children, do all my laundry and do home work for a garment factory, and I feel fine and never get tired. I have also used the Sanative Wash and it relieved my trouble."—Mrs. Chas. S. Pittinger, 55 Conklin Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Helen Jacobs Is Favored To Repeat

Meets Marjorie Sacks Today in First Test of National Play.

Sarah Palfrey, Betty Nuthall Considered Greatest Threats.

NEW YORK, Aug. 12 (AP).—The tennis experts tonight termed Sarah Palfrey, of Brookline, Mass., and "Bounding Betty" Nuthall, of England, the most formidable threats to Helen Jacobs' continued sway as United States woman's champion, on the eve of the forty-seventh championships opening tomorrow at Forest Hills.

Although Miss Jacobs, winner of the title for the last two years, still was reckoned the favorite, her play this year has been too spotty to warrant her selection as a standout, such as Helen Wills Moody used to be in this tournament.

Others Prominent.

Against Miss Jacobs' splendid showing in the Wightman Cup matches, where she and Miss Palfrey single-handed defeated Britain's picked squad, there remained to be considered her defeat by Margaret (Peggy) Scriven in the French hard court finals; by Dorothy Round in the Wimbledon finals, and by Carolin Babcock, of Los Angeles, in the finals of the Seabright tournament recently, the only domestic competition in which she has played since her return from abroad.

Although Miss Palfrey and Miss Nuthall, who won the championship in 1930, loom as the Berkeley girl's most dangerous rivals, there are many others in the field deserving consideration. Among these are Miss Babcock and Miss Nuthall's English mates, Katherine Stammers and Frieda James, as well as the veteran Elizabeth Ryan, a former Californian, who long has lived in England.

Others Are Entered.

All of the ranking American aces, except Mrs. Moody and Alice Marble, ranked nationally as No. 2 and No. 3, respectively, are entered.

Other leading matches in the first round:

Miss Babcock vs. Josephine Cruickshank, of Santa Ana, Calif.
Miss Winthrop vs. Gracyn Wheeler, of Los Angeles.
Virginia Rice, Boston, vs. Mrs. Penelope Anderson McBride, of Richmond, Va.
Miss Ryan vs. Eunice Dean, San Antonio, Tex.
Mae Ceurvorst, Wichita, Kans., vs. May Hope Doeg, Santa Monica, Calif.
Miss Nuthall vs. Priscilla Merwin, Los Angeles.
Miss Stammers vs. Helen Pederson, Stamford, Conn.
Miss Palfrey vs. Ruby Bishop, San Marino, Calif.
Mrs. Van Ryn vs. Josephine Gray, Cincinnati.
Miss James vs. Mrs. Virginia Erb, Buffalo.
Dorothy Andrus, Stamford, Conn., vs. Jean Burritt, Toronto.

46,766 Watch Red Sox Split With Yanks

20,000 More Turned Away Babe Ruth Cheered on Last Stand.

BOSTON, Aug. 12 (AP).—A record crowd of 46,766 bade farewell to Babe Ruth, who made what he said was his last appearance as a regular player in Boston today as the Red Sox and New York Yankees divided a double-header, the Sox winning the first game, 6 to 4, and the Yankees the second, 7 to 1.

The great Babe played the entire first game and 7⅓ innings of the nightcap. When he left the game the crowd rose and accorded him a tremendous ovation. Twenty thousand other fans were turned away for lack of space. It was the Yankees last appearance of the season in Boston.

Thomas, Burke Will Hurl in Twin Bill

Stone May Return to Play This Week; Nats Will Keep Phillips.

By Frank H. Young.

FOR the third time in as many days, the Nats and Mackmen will try to stage a double-header this afternoon. Today was planned as one of rest for both teams by the schedule makers, but the weather man butted in Saturday and permitted but one game when two were planned, while he halted the first game of yesterday's planned twin bill with the teams deadlocked at 1-all in the eighth of the scheduled opener.

As a result there are still two games to be played in this series, and so an effort will be made to get them out of the way today. Unless Connie Mack, of the visitors, sent home for some pitchers last night—for he left all but three or four behind on the trip here—he will have to call on Bill Dietrich, who beat the Nats Friday, to perform in one of the games, while Johnny Marcum will get the call in the other. Skipper Joe Cronin will use Alphonse ("Tommy") Thomas, and probably Bobby Burke, as his flingers.

Only one extra-base hit was made in yesterday's game and it did not count in the box score. It was made by Catcher Charley Berry in the washed-out eighth. Cronin also lost a hit, while Whitehill struck out two which are not credited.

First-sacker Joe Kuhel has thrown away his cane and now is able to hobble about on his own power. Indications are, however, that he will be of little or no use to the Nats for the remainder of the season. It will be three or four weeks before the regular first-sacker will be able to take the mildest of workous and then it probably will take the rest of the season for him to get back in playing condition.

The only advantage to getting Kuhel in condition this campaign will be to give him confidence in his ailing leg so that when he starts off at the 1935 training camp, he will not be handicapped by any fear that his ankle is not completely cured.

Catcher Eddie Phillips, recently returned to the Nats by the Albany International Leaguers, probably will be kept, President Clark Griffith stated yesterday. Even with Phillips, who likely will not be used much except to warm up pitchers, there are only 22 on the Nats' roster, one less than they are allowed to carry.

Dean Brothers Routed, Cubs Win Pair

Cards Beaten, 7-2, 6-4, as Aces Are Pounded; Babe Herman Hits 2 Homers.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 12 (AP).—A near capacity crowd of 32,000 today saw the Chicago Cubs drive the Dean brothers from the mound in successive games to win both sides of a double-header, the first game, 7 to 2, and the nightcap, 6 to 4, and settle the St. Louis Cardinals deeper in third place.

After pitching excellent baseball through seven innings, Dizzy Dean went out of the second game when the second place Cubs unleashed a batting attack in the eighth that included a triple, two doubles and a single to count four runs. They made two runs earlier. It was Dizzy's fifth defeat of the season.

Paul Dean Routed.

In the first game the Cubs greeted Paul Dean with a brace of home runs, by the two Hermans, in the fifth inning, and sent him out of the game with his sixth loss of the season. Babe Herman added another homer in the ninth.

The Cubs used Buck Weaver and Lon Warneke in the first game, but Malone went the full distance in the second, allowing only eight hits.

Nats and A's Halted, 1-1, By Rain

Downpour in 8th Ends Duel of Cascarella and Whitehill.

Macks Tie Count in 7th; 4 Washington Blows in 4th Net Run.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

THE Nate came so close to winning a ball game yesterday it wasn't funny. It was anything but humorous when rain started falliug in the eighth inning with Joe Cronin, representing the winning run, on second, Buddy Myer on first, and young Cecil Travis coming up to pinch-hit for Fred Schulte.

The pleasant picture of Travis slicing one into left-field and Cronin sprinting home with that all-important run already had been born in the fans' minds when the rain came whirling down, obliterating all traces of ball players, baserunners and a Washington triumph.

Game Ends, 1 to 1.

So the Nats had to be content with a 1-1 draw, and for the third time in as many days the combatants are scheduled to play a double-header this afternoon.

Earl Whitehill was doing the pitching for our side when play was abruptly terminated. You probably already guessed that, because Earl usually is the victim when the Nats lose on a fluke hit, error or some other quirk of fate.

The Earl gave 'em 12 hits during the eight innings he toiled, not the best performance in the world, but when a guy gives 'em 12 hits and holds 'em to one run, brother, he's pitching baseball. Earl was in trouble at various stages of the game but he worked out of it like you take off an ovecoat.

Strikes Out Foxx.

To illustrate, he found Jimmy Foxx at the plate, menacingly wavinng a young telephone pole at him in the third inning with Dib Williams on third and Bob Johnson on first and two out. The Earl started to pitch—throwing those pretzel curves at Foxx. He threw 'em inside and outside, up and down, and when Jimmy waved at the third trike the total damage was two foul tips.

Cramer reached second after he singled and Williams sacrificed in the fifth, and, with Johnson and Foxx next in line, it appeared likely that the A's would score. But Whitehill, unwinding like a barber pole, forced both to roll out to the infield.

Of course, Philadelphia eventually solved him for its run. It came in the seventh when Cramer singled with one down and went to second on Williams' single to center. Johnson flied out and then Foxx, held hitless three times, merely tapped one to left for the run.

Cascarella Hurls Well.

This fellow Joe Cascarella, the warbler from South Philly, didn't do so bad for himself either. The Nats had only eight hits when the storm came up, although Jce was in a pretty tough spot when the shower came to his rescue.

Prior to the eighth Cascarella's worst inning was the fourth when four Washingtonians hit safely. A a run, but three consecutive hits to double play temporarily staved off right finally got it.

Going over the inning in detail, Susko opened with a single to center, only to be erased when Manush hit into a double play. But Cronin started it again with a drive to right and Myer shoved him around to third with another hit to the same sector.

Scores on Bolton's Hit.

'Frisco scored on Bolton's single, also to right. Myer and Bolton were stranded as Schulte fouled to Berry.

Cronin's single opened the eighth and Myer put him in scoring position with a sacrifice bunt. But dark clouds hovered overhead and the A's stalled for time as the rain started downward. Umpire Kolls started to halt the game, then decided to resume as Cronin demanded in a loud tone that they continue.

Bolton was purposely passed, another time-wasting effort ,and Mack's move proved to be the correct one, as the increasing downpour made it impossible for the teams to continue.

Yankee, Undamaged, Sails on Test Cruise

Mattapoisett, Mass., Aug. 12 (AP). All hands had "an easy" today, except for Yankee's crew, as the New York Yacht Club halted its annual cruise for a Sabbath stopover.

The harbor was jammed with yachts of all sizes and rigs, participating in the cruise, but only Yankee of the contenders for the defense of the America's cup made sail and stood out on Buzzards Bay. Shen went out to test another mainsail. Yankee left her anchorage only after a diver had gone down to make sure she had not been damaged when her centerboard struck on a shoal just before she finished yesterday's race from Newport.

Bill Bonthron Defeated by Lovelock

Loses 3d Time in Row to Rival; Americans Dominate Meet.

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 12 (AP).—For the third succeessive time, Jack Lovelock, New Zealand's crack middle distance runner, conquered Bill Bonthron today, beating the burly Princeton ace by 5 yards over the 1,500-meter route in an international track and field meet in the Olympic Stadium.

A crowd of 4,000, half-filling the stadium, saw Jerry Cornes, of Great Britain, set the pace for the first 1,300 meters of the feature race. Then Lovelock stepped to the front, closely pursued by Bonthron. Princeton's bill could not match the New Zealander's closing sprint and Lovelock won comfortably in 3:53. Bonthron was clocked in 3:41.1 and Cornes, in third place, in 3:54.9. The race was run in a drizzle and the course was swept by a strong wind.

Won at Princeton.

Lovelock had defeated Bonthron at Princeton last summer, setting up what then was a new world's record of 4:07.6 for the mile. The New Zealander beat Bonthron again in this year's meet between the combined forces of Oxford and Cambridge and Cornell and Princeton.

Except for Lovelock's triumph and a double sprint victory for the Dutchman, Christiaan Berger, Americans captured a major share of the day's honors.

Jack Torrance, Louisiana State's huge weight man, easily defeated John Lyman, of the San Francisco Olympic Club, in the shot put with a toss of 16.25 meters, or 50 feet 3 25-32 inches.

Ben Eastman, of the Olympic Club, won the 800-meter run in 1:53.3. Cornelius Johnson, of Compton (Calif.) Junior College, annexed the high jump, clearing 1.95 meters, 6 feet 4⅞ inches, with Jack Metcalfe, of Australia, second at 1:90 meters, 6 feet 3 inches.

Eulace Peacock, of Temple, won the broad jump at 7.10 meters, or 23 feet 3⅝ inches. Percy Beard, of the New York A. C., won the 110-meter hurdles in easy style from Finlay, of England, in 14.9 seconds.

Charlotte Franchise Is Reported for Sale

Atlanta, Aug. 12 (AP).—The Atlanta Journal says Mrs. Wilbert Robinson and Johnny Dobbs are eager to dispose of the Charlotte franchise in the Piedmont League.

"The late Mr. Robinson and Dobbs were co-owners of this outfit and upon the death of Uncle Robby his widow let it be known she would sell. Dobbs himself is looking for a purchaser," the Journal adds. "The franchise may be sold to a major league club on Dobbs' return to Charlotte from Atlanta, where he attended the funeral services of his partner and friend."

Mangan Victor Over Lavine For Title

Wins at Atlantic City, in Five Sets With Rally in Last Set-to.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 12 (Spl.).—The Middle States Coast Tennis championship went to 40-year-old Tom Mangan here today in a five-set final with a player 16 years his junior, Gabe Lavine, the Philadelphia and district title-holder.

The grand old fellow finished the match bravely before a large crowd of spectators around the Municipal Courts. He had to have the courage to stand off two match points at 4—5, 15—40 in the fifth set to gain his conquest over Lavine. The scores were 6—4, 6—4, 1—6, 5—7, 8—6.

This encounter was spread over two days, a heavy electrical storm yesterday having halted play in the second set. Mangan had won the first, 6—4, and Lavine led, 3—2, and deuce on service in the second set when the rain came on. The match was resumed from this point today.

Head of Association.

Mangan was the runner-up to Fred Roll, of the University of Pennsylvania in 1933 in five sets, and is the president of the Middle Atlantic Lawn Tennis Association.

Two other championships were decided. Alfred Elwell, of Moorestown Friends, won the junior boy's singles by defeating Harry Albert, 6—4, 9—11, 6—1, 6—1.

George Spangler, Philadelphia and Reading Club, and Fred Wood, of Ocean City, captured the doubles crown by defeating Bill Jordan and George Ball, Atlantic City, 6—4, 6—0.

Kizer Will Coach All-Star Eleven

Chicago, Aug. 12 (AP).—Noble Kizer, of Purdue, one of the seven mules who opened holes for the famous "Four Horsemen" of Notre Dame in 1924, is the fans' choice as head coach of the college all-star team which meets the Chicago Bears, National professional football champions, at Soldier Field on the night of August 31.

Kizer rolled up 261,485 votes in the Chicago Tribune's poll to select a coach. His assistants will be two other Western Conference coaches, Dick Hanley, of Northwestern, and Bob Zuppke, of Illinois. Hanley's total was 249,046, while Zuppke's supporters mailed in 245,048 votes. Forty-three coaches, representing every part of the country, collected votes.

League Lead Boosted to 4½ Games

Killing Is Made in 7th, Owen to Greenberg; 30,000 Look On.

Detroit Rallies in 9th to Deadlock Count on Cochrane's Blow.

DETROIT, Aug. 12 (AP).—The Tigers hung up their twelfth consecutive victory today, defeating the Cleveland Indians, 6 to 5, in the tenth inning of a game featured by Detroit's second triple play of the season.

The victory gave Detroit a clean sweep for its series with the Indians and a four and one half game lead over the Yankees, whom they meet in a five-game series in New York this week.

The Tigers got to Pearson for 11 hits, one of them a home run by Marvin Owen in the sixth inning. Cleveland got 10 hits off Hamlin and Marberry, including Averill's home run in the third with two on base. Marberry got credit for the victory.

Starts Triple Play.

Besides hitting his homer, Owen also was credited with starting the triple play which he and Frank Greenberg worked in the seventh inning. The feat was accomplished when the Tigers were leading Cleveland, 4 to 3. The Indians had Pearson on third and Galatzer on first, none out and Knickerbocker at bat. The latter lined to Owen who made a remarkable stop, retired Pearson and then threw to Greenberg who made a backhand catch of the ball to put out Galatzer at first.

Averill's homer gave Cleveland a tie in the third only to have Owen's homer put the Tigers ahead again in the sixth. The Indians scored twice to go ahead in the Coach Al Schacht left for Detroit during yesterday's play, where he will clown this afternoon at a benfit exhibition game between the Tigers and Cardinals.

Johnny Stone, the injured flychaser, has high hopes of getting back in the Nat line-up this week. He has gradually tested his injured ankle and now believes he is just about ready to step out and forget that it was ever hurt.

Good morning! Frankly, we wish we didn't have to reduce the prices of sports trousers at the height of the season for wearing them. But we have got to be preparing for our first Fall apparel showing and sports trousers must go the way of all remaining summer apparel. You no doubt need a pair or two.

Several Post Association Week-Day League Titles to Be Decided This Week

Victory to Net Crown to G.P.O.

Meets Navy Yard Today in Departmental; Pigs vs. Brewers Wed.

Yesterday's Big Sunday Program Washed Out by Downpour.

THE Post Association teams in the organized sandlot leagues in the District, Maryland and Virginia were forced to mark time in the pennant marches yesterday when Jupiter Pluvius drowned all hopes of ball games yesterday afternoon with a torrential shower much to the disgust of the players.

Competition in Post Association ranks promises to be fast and furious as the sectoinal winners of four week-day loops begin their battles for the respective league titles. The eventual survivors will compete in The Post Interleague series to be staged early next month. The presidents of the various leagues will meet Thursday at The Post to discuss plans for this series.

G. P. O. Near Title.

Much interest is centered in the Government Printing Office-Navy Yard tilt today in the Departmental league competition. A victory for the Printing Office team would give it the second series league title and the right to meet Investigation, first-half winner, in the play-off series for The Post Association crown in this loop.

Heurich Brewers and Pig 'n' Whistle resume their struggle for Post Association laurels Wednesday in the second of a three-game series for the Industrial League championship. The Brewers won the first contest, 8 to 0. It will not be surprising if Manager Bill Flester again sends Reggie Brown to the mound in an effort to bag the title in two straight games. Adger Adair, promising young pitcher, will carry the hopes of the Pigs, with burly Frank Watt in reserve.

President George Link, of the National Capital League, will call a meeting today for the purpose of accelerating the championship series between Center Market and Acacia Insurance. If possible, Lank plans to get the series under way by Wednesday or Thursday.

Federal Play-Off Thursday.

Adjutant General Office and G. P. O., sectional winners in the Federal League, are expected to clash Thursday in the opening of the pennant series, contingent upon the return of several G. P. O. players who are away in Citizens' Miliary Training Camp.

Manager McAuley has booked several contests for the Grace A. C., champion of the Georgetown Church League. By means of these games and daily practice McAuley hopes t okeep his team on edge for The Post Association Interleague series, to be staged early in September.

At the Post . . .

with Bill Bennings.

Narragansett Park, Aug. 12.

Dear Al:

Bill wired that he was rained out today and would not arrive until tomorrow. He wished one more day's fishing, so I am slipping you the dope before leaving for Maryland.

The typical wash-day card is on for tomorrow, and as it is impossible to give you track conditions tonight, due to hovering clouds, my advice would be to take it easy until the track dries out.

It was fetlock-deep in mud yesterday, but I was there with the usual two winners. I will be seeing you. Yours, JOE.

First race—This mile and a sixteenth affair is for 3-year-olds and upward that have not won a race since April 1. They started foolin' folks then and have kept it up. Pernickety, with C. Perna up, finished a bang-up second his last out, and should win this heat. Paddock, a sprinter, never having gone over 6 furlongs, has Hughes carded to ride, which means that he will bear watching. Gracia may run third. Has shown fair form on off tracks.

Second race—The conditions for the second race are the same as for the first, so you can not expect too much of such mutts. Squeeze Out, with a feather up, may squeeze in. C. Hanford will be in the pilot house. Old Diasaburo is old enough to know better. Likes one kind of a track as well as another, and is the contender in spite of carrying 116 pounds. Blind Brook should not be worse than third.

Third race—Two-year-old maiden colts and geldings scamper 5½ furlongs. I hear that Admiral Grayson is sweet on his entry, Rough Rider and On Our Way. The former, a first-time starter, has been breezing halves in 49, and will have Hughes up. On Our Way finished second his last out. The Labrot entry's standard bearer, Colonis, should finish ahead of Right Flank, which has worked well for this race.

Fourth race—I understand that Hughes, who handles Flying Don well, will have the mount tomorrow, and for that reason am putting him on top. Dornoch is very consistent and can run on any kind of a track. Jockey T. King should boot Polyfon in ahead of the 6-year-old Jaz Age. The latter is always trying but isn't the "hoss" he was a couple of years ago.

Fifth race—Gallardia, an easy winner July 20, has been scratched three times since, waiting for a spot. Khamseen is the other half of the Mikel entry. Throw out his last start; it went for Sweeny, Redress, with Robertson up, will probably fight it out for the minor award with Source Circle. The latter, ridden by little Haines, is always trying and the boy is riding in fair form.

Sixth race—Another race for non-winners since April 1, so you can judge the class entered. Corvine, a maiden, is the only one of the horses entered that has ever been in the money in its last three starts. May defeat Taunton, which will no doubt rule favorite. Anything is liable to show. In fact, Olamay.

Seventh race—Any one of half a dozen of the horses entered in this race could enter the winners' circle without a murmur of surprise. The Baroni entry, Friar Mark and Polly Cee, have shown good form and have the best of the weights. Prince Tokalon, a bear when good, is rounding to. Manager Bill, with little Reide up, may show at a fair price. The White entry, Grand Acre and Boy Crazy, can not be overlooked in this company.

Eighth race—This race is a substitute and will hardly be run unless there is more rain and a race declared off on account of scratches. Ayston will rule a big favorite in event that he starts. Liberty Oak is a superior mudder while Merovech, an in-and-outer, should finish in the money.

Martinsburg Defeats Hagerstown Nine, 9-0

Martinsburg, W. Va., Aug. 12 (Spl.).—The lastplace Martinsburg Club has been a jinx to Hagerstown all season, and today was no exception, the Blue Sox pounding out a 9-to-0 decision over the second place Marylanders.

Raymond Jones occupied the hero's role for the winners today, holding the opposition to three hits. He was slightly shaky, walking five, but good defensive play behind him kept runners away from the plate.

Good limited Woodstocw to five hits, bunched in the only inning in which the visitors scored. Harrisonburg tapped Brewbaker for ten safeties, but he kept them well scattered.

Harrisonburg scored with two away in the first inning when Stroup singled and Keister's hit got by the left-fielder for two bases. Woodstock knotted the count with two out in the fourth when Ray Baker doubled and Wickham singled.

Deciding Run in Seventh.

The deciding tally came in the seventh when Bear singled, took second on a passed ball and tallied on Kibler's blow.

The victors gave Good errorless support, while Woodstock was charged with four errors. Mathias and Lloyd Baker fielded well. Whitehead and Ray Baker shared hitting honors, each driving out a double and a pair of singles.

Browns, White Sox Split Close Games

Victory in Second Worth $500 to Earnshaw.

Chicago, Aug. 12. (AP).—Pitching with $500 at stake, George Earnshaw defeated St. Louis, 3 to 2, today and gave the White Sox an even split of a double-header after the Browns had taken the opening game, 4 to 2.

The victory was Earnshaw's eleventh, as against seven defeats. Under a preseason agreement with owner Lou Comiskey, he is to get a $500 cash bonus for each triumph over ten. Allowing nine hits, one more than his Sox mates could get off Buck Newsom and Ivy Andrews, Earnshaw needed ace defensive support from his infield to win, however.

In the opener, Al Simmons brought about a temporary 2-to-2 tie with his seventeenth homer with one on in the fourth inning.

Brown-Petrin Bout Tonihgt Toss-Up

It's 6-5, Take Your Choice, in 10-Round Natural at Ball Park.

DON PETAIN, the lad with a name like a Spanish cavalier and a left like a Spanish cavalier's rapier, will make an attempt to swarm over plodding, cagey Natie Brown, seventh ranking heavyweight contender in a first-class, A-1, ten-round natural at Grifith Stadium tonight.

Ordinarily, the pounds-lighter New Jersey boxing artist would be conceded litiite opportunity of upsetting a heavyweight battler of Brown's high position. On this particular fight, however, the local gambling gentry is wagering 6 to 5, and take your choice, which is equivalent to even money among nonprofessional wagerers.

Petrin is a fast, clever, shifty fighter who hits, runs and feints in the exact manner calculated to throw the Washington heavyweight contender off his stride. Backers of the New Jersey Adonis contend that he will completely dazzle Brown with his great speed and flashy ringmanship.

PETRIN

"Brown's a clown fighter, who's got all the breaks and Don'll prove it tomorrow night," exploded Al Lippe, the famed old fight figure who with Jimmy Erwin pulls the strings on Petrin, upon his arrival here yesterday. "If Petrin doesn't beat Brown, it won't be because I haven't told him how."

Infighting Cited.

Brown's backers, while conceding that Petrin maneuvers about the ring with greater ease and facility than their man, are firm in the belief that Brown will be able to reach the midsection early enough in the fight to slow Petrin down to a slow canter. There is no considered better infighter in the heavyweight ranks today than Brown and should he be able to get close enough to Petrin to start firing at his brisket, he probably will be able to pick him to pieces very scientifically and methodically.

"Natie's had these run-away boys before, and beaten them," Brown's manager, Billy McCarney explained yesterday. "Al Stillman, who is a darned sight faster than Petrin, ran to all four corners of the ring, but Brown licked him twice. Once Natie gets inside, they haven't a chance. Bob Tow looked pretty good for a coupla rounds, didn't he? Yet Brown wore him down and took the decision. My by wore Arthur Huttick down too, didn't he? And he almost had Huttick out towards the last, didn't he? Well, he'll finish Petrin."

Inflation Sales Fail to Grip Market

Crop Estimates, General Rains Tend to Deflate Staple's Rise.

New York, Aug. 12 (AP).—Not since last November have the financial markets seen such an inflationary flurry of selling of dollars and bonds and buying of commodities and equities as this week.

The Government's grain crop estimates, together with general rains over the drought areas, tended to deflate the rise in staples at the end of the week.

The inflation fervor did not at any time seem to take a very firm grip on the stock market, but it sent the dollar down and helped to send United States Government and other high-grade bonds into the sharpest decline since November.

Silver Issue.

Last November, it was the RFC's gold-buying and price-fixing program. This time it was silver. The announcement of the nationalization of the white metal on Thursday came when drought damage to corn, and the Government's first estimate of the cotton crop, already had the commodity markets rising, and speculators were quick to interpret it as inflationary.

Wall street banking authorities and monetary experts said that in itself, however, the silver nationalization and the printing of silver certificates as outlined at the Treasury, was unlikely to make any important change in the volume of currency in circulation, at least in the near future.

Big foreign exchange speculators, particularly in Paris, actively sold the dollar, sending it to the lowest level in relation to the gold currencies of last autumn, and considerable selling of United States Government bonds developed.

The Federal issues, however, were influenced by a variety of factors, and had started downward before the new silver moves had even been rumored.

Touch High Prices.

Among other things, dealers and investors, seeing the Treasury issues touch about the highest prices of a generation a few weeks ago, wondered if they were not getting too high. Then in the past fortnight, the Treasury put out its guaranteed issues of farm mortgage and Home Owners Loan bonds on a rather wobbly market, and they did not go very well.

Furthermore, as the drought damage spread, it became apparent that Government relief expenditures would be considerably larger than anticipated. And after silver took the headlines, selling of the Treasurys became the heaviest in a long time.

Home of Three Centuries a Hit

Post Sponsored Residence in Forest Hills Wins Wide Praise.

A masterpiece in design, furnishing, planning and equipment, "The Home of Three Centuries," by W. & J. Sloans, at Albemarle street and Linnean avenue, in Forest Hills, has been the talk of the city during the period of its presentation.

This home, sponsored by The Washington Post, is presented by the C. H. Hillegeist Co. for the owners, William H. Saunders Co., Inc. The landscaping is by E. H. Bauer. The house is an "all gas home," with equipment, including an automatic gas heater and Electrolux refrigerator, by the Washington Gas Light Co.

The best specimens of decorative motifs have been employed by the Sloane organization in the furnishing of the residence. They cover a range of three centuries from the Queen Anne and Georgian periods, on the lower floor, to the Empire and modern eras, on the upper.

This distinguished exhibit dwelling will be open daily from 10 a. m. until 9 p. m. until further notice. To view it, go out Connecticut avenue to the traffic light at Albemarle street and then turn east for three blocks toward Rock Creek Park.

Banking Recovery Lauded by Morris

Chicago Financier Praises New Deal Program.

"Bankers should be more appreciative of the Administration's recovery efforts than any other single class in the business community," Ira Nelson Morris, minister to Sweden during the World War, and prominent Chicago financier, said here yesterday.

Mr. Morris recently returned from Europe where he investigated economic conditions in relation to American trade.

"Legislative and administrative action since the bank holiday has greatly strengthened the banking systems," he said.

"Bankers who formerly opposed deposit guaranty now consider it highly beneficial as it has eliminated the danger of 'runs.' By insistence on higher standards of management and operation the Government is performing a service for bankers as well as depositors."

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Failure of Treasury Offering of Home Owners Loan Corporation Obligations Reflects Growing Skepticism of Investors.

One of the most important development of last week in the field of finances has gone largely unnoticed because of the various spectacular plays by the Administration in monetary affairs. This development was the failure of the Treasury to sell its entire offering of bonds of the Home Owners Loan Corporation. The offering was for $180,000,000. It sold only $127,000,000. The Treasury took the other $28,000,000.

To appreciate the significance of this record it must be borne in mind that the obligations of the Home Owners Loan Corporation are guaranteed both as to principal and interest by the United States Government. They also enjoy the same exemptions from taxation as direct obligations of the Government. In a word, they are United States obligations for all practical purposes. In the market they are treated as such.

Means in Effect Failure Of a Treasury Offering.

The failure to sell the entire amount of the offering, therefore, means in effect the failure of the Government to sell an offering of its own short-term obligations. This is, according to those who follow such things, the first time this century that such a failure has been experienced. If there were no mitigating circumstances it would be the most serious kind of a development. For when a government is unable to sell its obligations it is face to face with the necessity of starting the printing presses, unless it overhauls its financial policies and thereby restores its credit standing.

The mitigating circumstance in this case was that the price offered was too low. Total subscriptions amounted to $283,000,000. All of those above $127,000,000, however, were at a price which the Treasury was unwilling to accept. Specifically, they were offers of below 90. The Treasury accepted only the bids of 99 and above.

Provides the Treasury an Excuse for the Failure.

This makes it possible for the Treasury to continue the fiction that the demand for Government obligations still is strong. It can go ahead maintaining that there is no hesitancy on the part of banks and investors to put their funds in Government paper. The only question is the price at which they are willing to make the investment. In the case of the Home Owners Loan Corporation bonds the price offered was unsatisfactory. The Treasury can get money cheaper in other ways. In refusing to accept the bids, accordingly, the Government merely was keeping itself from being "gouged" by investors.

Such an explanation should fool no one. The fact is that the investment community in offering such low prices for these obligations was reflecting a tendency to become satiated with the constant stream of Government borrowing that is taking place. It was showing it no longer looks with such favor upon keeping so many of its funds tied-up in a kind of paper that continues to grow in volume week after week.

One would think that under such circumstances the Government would seriously consider the advisability of taking steps to put its financial house in order.

Curb's Prices Hold Quiet

Fluctuations Are Small as Sales Average 140,000 Shares.

New York, Aug. 12 (AP).—With the exception of a single day, the curb market was generally quiet and price changes small during the past week.

After moving within a narrow range in extremely dull trading, the market picked up considerably on Thursday, shortly after the Administration nationalized silver and monetary strength was displayed by a number of volatile specialties and the metal stocks which stood to benefit by the day's developments.

Consolidated Mining soared more than 10 points, while Bunker Hill & Sullivan, Newmont and Lake Shore improved substantially. A number of wide gains were recorded in the miscellaneous list. General Tire & Rubber rose 8 points in Thursday's rally, while Aluminum Co. of America and Safety Car Heating were firm. Swift Internacional recorded successive new high marks for the year, in active dealings.

Utilities and oils ruled comparatively narrow, while alcohols yielded after improving around mid-week. Shares of Electric Bond & Share, Swift & Co., Gulf and Humble Oils, Wright Hargreaves, Glen Alden Coal and American Cynamid B all finished fairly steady.

Transfers of two exchange seats were announced. One at $23,000, off $3,000 from the previous sale, and later in the week at $18,500.

Sales for each full session averaged around 140,000 shares, up slightly from the week before.

Police Arrest 2, Seize 86 Gallons of Liquor

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 12 (Spl.).—Frank Mason and Clarence Morrison, of Corrigansville, were held in $1,000 bond each yesterday by United States Commissioner Taylor Morrison on a charge of transportation of illicit and untaxed liquor after Federal agents confiscated their automobile in which were 86 gallons of liquor.

Cotton Prices Rise Sharply During Week

Poor Crop Prospects Are Continued; Weather Unfavorable.

Cotton prices continued to advance through Thursday, declined somewhat on Friday and closed the week 57 points higher than on August 3. Factors contributing to the rise in prices were the continued poor crop prospects as indicated by the Government forecast of the smallest crop since 1921, continued dry weather and high temperatures in the Western States, and reports of excessive moisture in the Eastern States; increased activity in cotton and cotton cloth markets; and the nationalization of silver along with the rise in the prices of securities and other commodities.

Unfavorable factors were reports of smaller world consumption of American cotton both in the United States and in foreign countries, along with some decreases in purchases of finished cotton goods attributed to lessened purchasing power of consumers due to the drought.

Cotton Prices Higher.

The average price for middling ⅞-inch cotton quoted in the ten designated markets on August 10 was 13.45 cents, compared with 12.78 cents on August 3, and 8.99 cents on the corresponding day last season. On August 10 the ten market average price was 4.46 cents higher than on the corresponding day a year ago, and 6.66 cents higher than the corresponding day two years ago.

Grade premiums and discounts during the week were the same as in the previous week. The average premium for middling 15-16-inch was 19 points and for middling 1-inch 63 points over middling ⅞-inch in the six quoting markets on August 10.

In the Memphis market quotations for middling 1 1-16 inches and longer were the same as during the preceding week with 1 1-16 inches 105 points, 1⅛, 165 points, and 1 3-16, 290 points on middling ⅞.

Offerings Increase.

Offerings of spot cotton in the Texas markets were reported as larger than for last week, and sales for the week in the ten markets, amounting to 36,000 bales, were larger than for the previous week, but somewhat less than seasonal. Sales tended to be concentrated in the Texas markets and buying continued largely by shippers and merchants against old sales and for stock, according to trade reports.

During the week the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation awarded contracts amounting to about 61,000 bales, bringing the total awards to date up to 119,000 bales, against the contemplated purchase of 250,000 bales or more, announced previously.

Mill Buying Inactive.

New England and Southern mill centers reported buying of raw cotton inactive with few inquiries.

Offerings, however, in the Southern mill territory were reported as substantially larger than for recent weeks, with holders apparently more willing to dispose of their cotton at prevailing prices. Shippers and merchants were the principal buyers.

Tin Plate Mill Operations Up; Zinc Is Steady

Copper Remains Quiet at 9-Cent Basis for Blue Eagle.

New York, Aug. 12 (AP).—A sharp rise in tin plate production featured the metal markets in the past week, but while it had no immediate influence on the demand for tin, an advance of about one-half cent for the week was registered as the dollar weakened in foreign exchange following the Presidential decree nationalizing silver.

Tin plate mill operations rose from about 45 to 65 per cent of capacity on increased demand from can companies as a result of the slaughter of cattle in drought States.

Manufacturers were believed to have large supplies of metal on hand, however, and little or no buying developed as prices rose.

Tin Plate Operations.

The step-up in tin plate operation was also largely accountable for a slight rise in steel mill production. Otherwise there was little feature to the steel market, as replenishment buying remained disappointing.

Little immediate demand was anticipated from automobile makers; Government-financed rail orders are expected to be completed shortly and the construction outlook is dependent largely upon Federal projects. Finished prices were unchanged but scrap was easier. Pig iron was quiet and unchanged.

Antimony was the only other nonferrous metal to rise as a result of the weaker dollar, which made import costs higher from the Far East. A little covering appeared, but demand was not large.

Zinc displayed a very steady undertone, although the price was unchanged. July statistics showing a decrease in stocks made a favorable impression and because of low water supplies in the tristate mining district the trade does not anticipate that last week's step-up in ore production will be maintained. Moderate buying occurred, although total sales were not large.

Copper Holds Quiet.

Copper remained quiet at the unchanged basis of 9 cents for Blue Eagle. Aside from awards for 800,000 pounds on Navy Department requirements, business remained of small proportions.

The export quotation was a little steadier as a result of the action of foreign exchange, but that division of the market was also generally quiet.

Lead ruled steady in a generally quiet market. While consumers' August requirements have been well filled, the nationalization of silver and advance in commodities failed to stimulate any noticeable demand for September needs.

PWA Paving to Start.

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 12 (Spl.).—Fifty men will start Monday to pave 4 miles of the old Plank road between Berlin and Wellersburg, about 5 miles north of Mount Savage, Md., with funds to be furnished by the Federal Public Works Administration.

Radio Waves

WHEN we first read Charles F. Coy's letter to WJSV yesterday, we put it down that Mr. Coy had soured on life because there are so many trumpet and trombone players in orchestras these days. Mr. Coy is a clarinet player. He speaks of "happier times."

But we read Mr. Coy's letter a second time and decided (1) that we'd probably feel the same way about things if we'd gone on with our banjo lessons, (2) that here was a soul like our own, shattered and tortured—steam shovels and pneumatic drills under our window by day, trumpets and trombones on our radio by night; (3) that Mr. Coy's letter was an important human document and should be recorded.

Mr. Coy wrote to ask WJSV for heaven's sake keep on playing phonograph records. But it isn't until we read down to Mr. Coy's reasons for preferring records "to any other form of entertainment" that his letter becomes really significant.

He begins with a statement of a well-founded truth: that records are made from the best in entertainment at top form, the cream of the crop, so to speak. Then:

"I have tried to find out why the dance orchestras (when broadcasting) spoil everything they play. The tunes are all good (a sudden surge of generosity on Mr. Coy's part, perhaps), but are distorted by trumpets and trombones playing intentionally out of tune and in a manner that no musician would be allowed to practice in happier times. I have been a clarinet player for over 30 years, but now I dread to hear a clarinet, for that instrument seems to be selected for the most fiendish work in distorting really good music."

That hurts.

NO mere gawking landlubber is going to describe the America's Cup races next month for N. B. C.

Right now in Radio City some of the Nation's best-known sailors, salt water sailors, at that, are being auditioned "just like ordinary applicants for announcers' or actors' jobs." N. B. C. wants people who know the difference between a balloon jib and a topsail to handle this race. And it means that they shall have diction, a speaking acquaintance with microphone technique.

So far, only one of the skippers has been selected. He is Fred Gade, one of yachting's best authorities. He, other sailing masters who pass their audition examinations and a corps of announcers will be strung at strategic points off Nantucket, where T. O. M. Sopwith's challenger, Endeavour, and an American defender, yet to be picked, will compete for the historic cup.

Ripples . . .

Richard Himber, N. B. C. bandman, can not with modesty see himself as another Toscanini, but if he says he's Sherlock Holmes, it's all right . . . for weeks he has received daily a postcard asking him to play a song entitled "I Can't See" . . . anxious to please, he scoured Tin Pan Alley for the number, to no avail . . . then, out of a clear sky came another postcard inscribed "Thanks" . . . which was altogether too bewildering until Himber, checking over the tune he played the night before, came upon "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" . . . everything's all right with the Landt Trio and White, too . . . recently their time on N. B. C. was changed from 9:15 a. m. back to 8:15, enabling them to use again their theme song "On the 8:15" . . . Jesse Crawford has returned to N. B. C. . . . a day at the Westchester Country and Beach Club, a penthouse party, "As Thousands Cheer," are some of the divertissements Columbia is planning for its "Hollywood Hotel" audition contestants.

Lightning Sets Forest Ablaze

1,000 CCC Men Rushed to New Outbreak in Washington.

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 12 (AP).—"Sky trouble" bothered foresters of the Pacific Northwest today as lightning fired two valuable stands of timber in the Selway National Forest on the Idaho-Montana line and wind spread the flames along a wide front.

Four thousand acres of timberland had been burned over in the latest outbreak of fire as forest officials rushed 1,000 CCC workers by plane and truck into the trouble zone.

Even as the Government marshaled its forces the wind whipped burning brands through the air for miles around to start new fires in a dozen places, while hundreds of additional fighters kept close watch over restless but corraled flames on a score of other fronts from California to Canada.

Fifty men were sent by plane from here during the night to Moose Creek field to join fighters from Montana in combatting the fires in the Selway Forest.

The flames raged fiercest in the Pere King Creek and McLernon Butte sections east of Kooskia.

Two hundred fighters, meantime, guarded against a new outbreak of the fire near Dallas, Oreg., which burned over 5,000 acres and destroyed two groups of farm buildings and several miles of fence before being brought under control late yesterday.

Grain Supply Is Reduced by Drought Effect

Shrinkage of European Crops Is Held as Large Factor.

Chicago, Aug. 12 (AP).—Rapid curtailment of prospective world breadstuff supplies apparently indicate a distinct likelihood that July 1, 1935, carryovers will be too small for comfort.

Leading unofficial grain trade authorities said today the swing from burdensome surpluses to an expected thin excess of world supply over demand has come suddenly owing to big shrinkage of European crops as well as to severe crop shortages in North America and Australia, with the Argentine outlook at present not more than fair.

The United States Government's newest crop report is asserted to confirm the scantiest wheat yield in this country since 1896, exclusive of considerable additional damage done by drought and abnormal heat since August 1, with domestic winter wheat areas not generally in shape for preparation of another crop.

Little Short Selling.

A burning question today was whether the sharp rise in wheat values had not at least partly discounted conditions, for the time being. It was pointed out by one of the foremost market experts that there had been comparatively little short selling of late, and that consequently there were increased chances for speculative air pockets to develop with any lull in general purchasing.

The statement was added that wide fluctuations in prices were likely in this kind of a market.

Tightening of the domestic wheat supply situation, however, is testified to by steep premiums paid for spot deliveries, as compared with futures.

Market Is Strong.

In this connection, the fact is stressed that the Minneapolis market, where the spring wheat movement is now centering, has been especially strong. Another striking aspect of stringent market conditions, is that upturns of prices in the United States have been outdone abroad, with Liverpool, Rotterdam, Buenos Aires, Winnipeg and Australia selling at the highest prices since 1930.

Among many corn traders, belief prevails that even widespread immediate rains would not result in any great improvement of the corn crop outlook other than causing ears to fill to a better degree. Oats and rye follow almost every fluctuation of the sister cereals.

Provisions are especially sensitive to behavior of the corn market.

Couple Burned In Stove Blast

Idlewood, Va., Folk Will Recover in District Hospital.

Sprayed by flaming oil when a stove in their home at Idlewood, Va., exploded yesterday, Powell Drumheeler, 39, and his wife, Mrs. Margaret Drumheeler, 36, were brought to Georgetown Hospital with face and body burns.

Drumheeler told police he was attempting to light a three-burner oil stove when he dropped a match. A deafening explosion followed. He and Mrs. Drumheeler were spattered by blazing oil.

They were burned about the face, hands and body, but their condition is not serious. The Drumheeler kitchen was badly damaged.

YOUNG OTTO-WON 16 FIGHTS BY KNOCKOUTS IN THE FIRST MINUTE OF THE FIRST ROUND.... IN ALL HE WON 45 FIGHTS IN THE FIRST ROUND...

Strangest among people who by some mental quirk decide to swallow almost everything they can lay their hands on was Edmond C. Nickels, private in the Fourth United States Cavalry. He ate hundreds of coins, buttons, bits of hardware, &c., over a period of years.

When his mental malady was discovered physicians operated, taking the amazing list of articles above from his stomach—and strange as it seems a week later a needle worked its way out of the wound, bringing the number of separate articles to 603. The 1-cent pieces, nickels, dimes and quarters that the patient had swallowed alone amounted to more than $13.

* * * *

The strange diet indulged in by Nickels apparently did little harm to him except that it interferred with his food. The operation was a success, and no complications developed, but Nickels died two weeks later—a victim of pneumonia.

Pop corn weighs a little more before it is popped than after, due to the fact that the heat necessary to pop it drives off some moisture and oils. The difference in weight is very slight, but nevertheless can be determined. The oils driven off in the popping process give freshly popped pop corn its characteristic odor.

Stores Flooded By Storm at Harrisonburg

Record Rainfall Washes Gulleys in Fields; Halts Traffic.

Harrisonburg, Va., Aug. 12 (Spl.).—A rainstorm of cloudburst proportions swept over Harrisonburg and the southern end of Rockingham County last night, flooding highways and stores in Harrisonburg, washing gulleys in fields and tearing away fences in low places.

For hours, traffic over the Valley pike was blocked by high water. Dayton, Mount Crawford, Bridgewater and other communities were isolated.

The water in low points on the pike between Harrisonburg and Dayton was 3 to 7 feet deep.

The heaviest damage was suffered by plowed fields, where huge gulleys were made.

South Main street, Harrisonburg, was flooded at a number of points, the water backing into a number of business places.

DICK TRACY Meditation

Walt Mason, Himself

Dillinger Departs.

The doughty Dillinger is dead. He stopped a heavy flight of lead, some with his breast, some with his head. For weeks he traveled like a ghost, among the shadows he would coast and dodge the stern official host. And then he would bob up once more and rob a bank or loot a store, and leave behind a trail of gore. "They'll never catch him," people cried, of Dillinger who had defied the law in all its pomp and pride. But when he robbed my treasure chest of seven smackers of the best, I said to him, "You're headed West. You may pursue your course of crime and be triumphant for a time, but on your neck the law will climb. The law is patient, if not fleet, it toils along on tireless feet, and never rests or takes a seat. Where are those bandits bold as brass, who lately traveled in your class? How many now are cutting grass? A lot are planted in the fen, and never will uprise again, and more are sweating in the pen. Forsake the path you now pursue, and join a moral wrecking crew, and haul stalled autos from the slough." He would not hear, at any price, the nuggets of my sage advice, but left my shanty in a trice. The road of villainy he kept and robbed poor bankers while they slept, and constables and peelers wept. Until his doomsmen came his way, and then he had no time to say the tragic words, "Crime doesn't pay."

THE MORE STEVE THINKS ABOUT HIS TELLING LARCENY LU OF JUNIOR TRACY'S MOTHER, THE ANGRIER HE GROWS...
WHY DID I EVER GIVE AWAY MY SECRET TO LU! OF COURSE I THOUGHT I WAS GOING TO KICK IN AND I FIGURED LU MIGHT AS WELL COME IN ON THAT LEGACY AS ANYBODY ELSE.
8-13
I NEVER IMAGINED I'D RECOVER! AND HERE I AM HELPLESS - BURIED IN THE BIG HOUSE AGAIN! WHILE LU IS FREE TO FIND THE KID'S MOTHER AND CLEAN UP A FORTUNE.
OF COURSE IT'S POSSIBLE I COULD GET IN TOUCH WITH SOME OF THE BOYS ON THE OUTSIDE AND HEAD HER OFF- HM-M..
BUT WHO SHOULD I GET IN TOUCH WITH? MOST OF THE BOYS ARE... AH- DOC HUMP! HE'S THE BIRD! THEY'VE GOT HIM IN JAIL NOW - BUT HE SHOULD BE ABLE TO GET OUT ON BOND.
